

HUMAN RIGHTS STATEMENT

- 1 This Human Rights Statement must be read together with the Statement of Reasons for the Orders made on 10 January 2022.
- 2 This document contains an explanation of the nature of the human rights limited by the Orders (section 165AP(2)(d)(i) of the Public Health and Wellbeing Act 2008 (Vic) (PHW Act)). It does so by reference to the Orders generally.
- 3 Then, by reference to each individual Order, it contains:
 - 3.1 a statement as to whether, in the opinion of the Minister, the Order does or does not limit any human right set out in the Charter of Human Rights and Responsibilities (the Charter) (section 165AP(2)(c) of the PHW Act);
 - 3.2 an explanation of:
 - 3.2.1 the importance of the purpose of the limitation (section 165AP(2)(d)(ii) of the PHW Act); and
 - 3.2.2 the nature and extent of the limitation (section 165AP(2)(d)(iii) of the PHW Act); and
 - 3.2.3 the relationship between the limitation and its purpose (section 165AP(2)(d)(iv) of the PHW Act); and
 - 3.2.4 any less restrictive means reasonably available to achieve the purpose that the limitation seeks to achieve (section 165AP(2)(d)(v) of the PHW Act).

Nature of human rights limited by Orders

- 4 Section 165AP(2)(d)(i) of the PHW Act requires an explanation of the human rights limited by a pandemic order.
- 5 It is important to recognise that a human right may be affected — either positively or negatively — by a particular restriction. This is sometimes referred to as the human right being engaged.
- 6 For example, a human right might be negatively affected by a restriction. However, some rights are subject to exceptions or qualifications contained within the right itself. If the relevant impact on the right imposed by an Order falls within an internal exception or qualification to that right, it will not "limit" the human right.
- 7 This document considers how human rights might be affected, in addition to considering how human rights may be limited.
- 8 That goes beyond what is required by section 165AP(2)(d)(i) of the PHW Act. However, for the purposes of giving proper consideration to human rights, it is necessary to consider all relevant human rights. There is conflicting court authority about whether that includes human rights that are both affected and limited, or just rights that are limited.
- 9 Finally, it is important to note that the "limitation" of a human right by an Order does not mean that the Order is "incompatible" with a human right. An Order will be "incompatible" with a human right if the "limitation" is not "demonstrably justified" under section 7(2) of the Charter.
- 10 Section 7(2) of the Charter states that a human right may be subject under law only to such reasonable limits as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society based on human dignity, equality and freedom, and taking into account all relevant factors including—
 - 10.1 the nature of the right; and
 - 10.2 the importance of the purpose of the limitation; and
 - 10.3 the nature and extent of the limitation; and
 - 10.4 the relationship between the limitation and its purpose; and
 - 10.5 any less restrictive means reasonably available to achieve the purpose that the limitation seeks to achieve.
- 11 These factors are the same factors that must be explained for the purposes of section 165AP(2)(d) of the PHW Act, in circumstances where I have formed the opinion that a human right is limited by an Order.
- 12 Against that background, this section sets out the explanation required by section 165AP(2)(d)(i) of the PHW Act, by reference to the human rights affected or limited by the Pandemic Orders.

Right to recognition and equality before the law (section 8)

- 13 Section 8(3) of the Charter relevantly provides that every person is entitled to equal protection of the law without discrimination, and everyone has the right to equal and effective protection against discrimination. The purpose of this component of the right to equality is to ensure that all laws and policies are applied equally, and do not have a discriminatory effect. 'Discrimination' under the Charter is defined by reference to the definition in the Equal Opportunity Act 2010 (Vic) (EO Act) on the basis of an attribute in s 6 of that Act. Relevantly, s 6 of the EO Act contains the attributes of age, disability, physical features, religious belief or activity, marital status, and parental or carer status.

- 14 Importantly, the definitions of direct and indirect discrimination incorporated into the Charter “operate according to their own terms to give protection against discrimination on the basis of an attribute within the free-standing legislative framework of the Charter (including s 8(3)) whether or not the discrimination is unlawful within the separate legislative framework of the EO Act”.¹ This may mean that while a particular decision or course of conduct may not meet the formal definition of discrimination under the EO Act, the right to equality may be engaged.
- 15 Direct discrimination occurs where a person treats a person with an attribute unfavourably because of that attribute. Indirect discrimination occurs where there is a requirement, condition or practice imposed that is the same for everyone, but disadvantages a person, or is likely to disadvantage a person, because they have one or more of the protected attributes, and the requirement, condition or practice is not reasonable.
- 16 The EO Act defines disability as including “the presence in the body of organisms causing disease or illness”. A person having COVID-19 therefore has a disability.
- 17 Indirect discrimination occurs where there is a requirement, condition or practice imposed that is the same for everyone but disadvantages a person, or is likely to disadvantage a person, because they have one or more of the protected attributes, and the requirement, condition or practice is not reasonable.²

Right to life (section 9)

- 18 The right to life and the right not to be arbitrarily deprived of life is a fundamental human right and is promoted by the making of the Pandemic Orders. Because the virus is life-threatening, the Pandemic Orders further that right, particularly in relation to vulnerable members of society who are at particular risk from broad and unrestricted transmission of COVID-19.
- 19 In addition, article 12(2)(c) of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (to which Australia is a signatory³) requires parties to take steps to achieve the full realisation of the right to the highest attainable standard of health, including by taking measures necessary for the prevention, treatment and control of epidemic diseases. Whilst this right is not directly protected by the Charter, Australia has international obligations to ensure fulfilment of the right and it was identified as relevant to the PHW Act in its Statement of Compatibility.

Right to protection from torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment (section 10)

- 20 The aspects of section 10 that relate to protection against torture and cruel inhuman or degrading treatment are not likely to be relevant to the Pandemic Orders. However, section 10(c) of the Charter states that a person must not be subjected to medical or scientific experimentation or treatment without full, free and informed consent. This section of the Charter largely reflects the requirements of Victorian law which makes it unlawful to render medical treatment without the informed consent of the person concerned, except in limited circumstances, and permits a person who is competent to refuse medical treatment.⁴

¹ Matsoukatidou v Yarra Ranges Council [2017] VSC 61 at [47] per Bell J.

² EO Act s 9.

³ In the Statement of Compatibility for to the Public Health and Wellbeing Bill 2008, then Minister for Health (now Premier Andrews) acknowledged this right, being the right of everyone to enjoy the highest attainable standard of health.

- 21 In New Zealand, the taking of a swab to obtain a bodily sample for forensic purposes has been held not to be medical treatment,⁵ however, the taking of a blood sample for the purposes of determining paternity was considered medical treatment.⁶
- 22 The PHW Act envisages that there will be circumstances in which it will be reasonably necessary to require a person to undergo medical testing in order to ascertain whether a person has an infectious disease (pursuant to s 113).
- 23 During the course of the COVID-19 pandemic, testing has been required in specified circumstances pursuant to the emergency power in s 200(1)(d) of the PHW Act (the power to give any other direction that the authorised officer considers is reasonably necessary to protect public health). High-risk industries have been required to undertake surveillance testing of their workforce (for example, hotel quarantine workers).
- 24 Section 10(c) of the Charter provides that a person must not be subjected to medical treatment without their full, free and informed consent. This section largely reflects the requirements of Victorian legislation, which makes it unlawful to render medical treatment without the informed consent of the person concerned, except in limited circumstances, and which permits a person who is competent to give consent to refuse medical treatment.⁷

Right to freedom of movement (section 12)

- 25 The right to freedom of movement is contained in s 12 of the Charter and protects three separate rights: the right to move freely within Victoria, the right to enter and leave Victoria, and the right to choose where to live in Victoria. Relevantly, it provides that every person lawfully within Victoria has the right to move freely within Victoria. It provides protection from unnecessary restrictions upon a person's freedom of movement and extends, generally, to movement without impediment throughout the State and a right of access to places and services used by members of the public, subject to compliance with regulations legitimately made in the public interest.⁸ The right is directed at restrictions that fall short of physical detention coming within the right to liberty under s 21.⁹ The right to freedom of movement may be limited where it is reasonable under s 7(2) of the Charter, including where it is necessary

⁴ See PBU & NJE v Mental Health Tribunal [2018] VSC 564; Department of Health and Community Services v JWB and SMB (Marion's Case) (1992) 175 CLR 218, 233–4; Re BWV; Ex parte Gardner (2003) 7 VR 487.

⁵ Taylor v Attorney-General HC Auckland CIV-2010-485-226, 9 July 2011, [32] and [36] and the cases considered therein.

⁶ Cairns v James [1992] NZFLR 353 (HC), 356.

⁷ Department of Health and Community Services v JWB and SMB (Marion's Case) (1992) 175 CLR 218, 233–4; Re BWV; Ex parte Gardner (2003) 7 VR 487.

⁸ Gerhardy v Brown (1985) 159 CLR 70, 102, cited in DPP v Kaba (2014) 44 VR 526 at [100] (Bell J).

⁹ Kracke v Mental Health Review Board (2009) 29 VAR 1at [588] (Bell J).

to protect public health.¹⁰ The right to freedom of movement is one of the most commonly qualified rights.¹¹

Right to privacy and reputation (section 13)

- 26 Section 13(a) of the Charter provides, relevantly, that a person has the right not to have their privacy or family unlawfully or arbitrarily interfered with. Section 13(a) contains internal qualifications; namely, interferences with privacy only limit the right to privacy if they are unlawful or arbitrary. An interference will be lawful if it is permitted by a law which is precise and appropriately circumscribed. An interference, on the other hand, will be arbitrary if it is, for example, capricious, unpredictable, unjust or unreasonable, in the sense of being disproportionate to the legitimate aim sought to be achieved by the limitation.
- 27 "Privacy" is a broad right. The fundamental values which the right to privacy addresses are the physical and psychological integrity, individual and social identity, and autonomy and inherent dignity of the person. In conjunction with other rights in the Charter, including the right to security of person in s 21, the right to privacy gives recognition to "the human right to personal integrity".¹⁰ It protects the individual's interest in the freedom of their personal and social sphere. Relevantly, this encompasses their right to establish and develop meaningful social relations and their right to maintain and develop relationships at work,¹¹ and may also extend to their right to education.
- 28 The "family" aspect of s 13(a) is related to s 17(1) of the Charter, which states that families are entitled to protection by society and the State. While the term "family" is not defined by the Charter, the meaning of this term should not be limited to families formed by formal marriage or co-habitation. This term will likely include at least ties between near relatives, such as between parents and their children, and between grandparents and grandchildren. However, whilst the two rights overlap, they are not co-extensive. Section 13(a) is a negative obligation that only prohibits unlawful or arbitrary interferences with family; whereas s 17(1) is a positive obligation on society and the State.
- 29 The "home" aspect of s 13(a) refers to a person's place of residence, regardless of whether they have a legal interest in that residence.¹² What constitutes an interference with this aspect of the right to privacy has been approached in a practical manner and may cover actions that prevent a person from continuing to live in their home¹³ as well interferences with the home itself.¹⁴

Right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief (section 14)

- 30 Section 14(1) of the Charter provides that every person has the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, including the freedom to have or adopt a religion or belief of one's choice (s 14(1)(a)), and to demonstrate one's religion or belief individually or as part of a community, whether in public or private, through worship, observance, practice and teaching (s 14(1)(b)). The concept of 'belief' is not limited to religious or theistic beliefs; it extends to non-religious beliefs as long as they possess a certain level of cogency, seriousness, cohesion and ¹⁰ See art 12(3) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political rights, which provides the purposes for which freedom of movement may be restricted. Although not reproduced in the Charter, art 12(3) provides a useful indication of the types of purposes that may be legitimate under s 7(2), including public health.

¹¹ DPP v Kaba (2014) 44 VR 526 at [117], citing Kerr v Attorney-General (1996) 4 HRNZ 270 at 274.

¹² Director of Housing v Sudi (2010) 33 VAR 139 at [32].

¹³ Director of Housing v Sudi (2011) 33 VR 559; [2011] VSCA 266.

¹⁴ PJB v Melbourne Health (Patrick's Case) (2011) 39 VR 373 at [61]-[62].

importance.¹⁵ Section 14(2) provides that a person must not be restrained or coerced in a way that limits their freedom to have a belief. Coercion in this context includes both direct and indirect forms of compulsion, such as penal sanctions and restrictions on access to employment.¹⁶

Right to freedom of expression (section 15)

- 31 Section 15(1) of the Charter provides that every person has the right to hold an opinion without interference, while section 15(2) provides that a person has the right to freedom of expression, which includes the freedom to seek, receive and impart information and ideas of all kinds, through various mediums. Although subject to some limitations, generally speaking, the freedom of expression under s 15(2) will encompass all forms of expression regardless of the content.¹⁷ The right to hold an opinion without interference (section 15(1)) is considered to be an absolute right, and therefore not subject to qualification. However, the right to express that opinion (section 15(2)) may be qualified. Section 15(3) recognises that the right to freedom of expression will often be in conflict with the rights of other people, and with the public good, and so may be subject to clear limits, including lawful restrictions reasonably necessary to protect public health. It is likely that section 15(2) supports an implied right to peaceful protest.
- 32 In order to constitute "expression", the speech or conduct in question should be "capable of conveying some kind of meaning".¹⁸ Further, there are limits to what will be considered expression. For example, facial hair,¹⁹ insulting and offensive language and behaviour in a public place,²⁰ acts of violence or criminal damage²¹ (though the act of spraying political graffiti may fit the bill). The protection of the right to freedom of expression is afforded "not only to 'information' or 'ideas' that are favourably received or regarded as inoffensive or as a matter of indifference, but also to those that offend, shock or disturb the State or any sector of the population. Such are the demands of that pluralism, tolerance and broadmindedness without which there is no 'democratic society'".²² Offensive expression may be justifiably restricted, but it is nevertheless "expression".²³ The freedom extends not only to political discourse, debate and protest but also to artistic, commercial and cultural expression, news and information.

Right to peaceful assembly and freedom of association (section 16)

- 33 Section 16(1) of the Charter provides that every person has the right to peaceful assembly. This provision reflects the right of persons to gather as a means of participating in public affairs and to pursue common interests or further common purposes. This includes gathering for the purpose of protest or political demonstration; however, to fall within the scope of section 16(1), an assembly must be peaceful, and the right will not protect violent protest, riots, and affrays. It is recognised that it may be necessary to take action to prevent an imminent breach of the peace, which may place restrictions on the rights of peaceful demonstrators.²⁴ While a gathering need not be for a particular purpose to attract the protection of this right, there is no guarantee

¹⁵ Campbell v United Kingdom (1982) 4 EHRR 293, [36]; Eweida v United Kingdom (2013) 57 EHRR 8, [81].

¹⁶ UN HRC, General Comment No 22, [5].

¹⁷ See, for example, Handyside v United Kingdom (1976) 1 EHRR 737, [49].

¹⁸ Magee v Delaney (2012) 39 VR 50.

¹⁹ Kuyken v Lay [2013] VCAT 1972 at [205]–[210].

²⁰ Ferguson v Walkley [2008] VSC 7 at [27].

²¹ Magee v Delaney (2012) 39 VR 50.

²² Handyside v United Kingdom [1976] ECHR 5 at [49].

²³ See, for example, DPP v Collins [2006] UKHL 40 at [14]; Monis v The Queen (2013) 249 CLR 92.

²⁴ See, for example, R (Laporte) v Chief Constable of Gloucestershire [2007] 2 AC 105; [2006] UKHL 55.

to a right to assemble for purely social or recreational purposes.²⁵ However, like most other rights, the right can be limited where reasonably justifiable in accordance with s 7(2) of the Charter.

- 34 Similarly, s 16(2) of the Charter relevantly provides that every person has the right to freedom of association with others. This right is concerned with allowing people to pursue common interests in formal groups, such as political parties, professional or sporting clubs, non-governmental organisations, trade unions, and corporations.²⁶

Right to protection of families and children (section 17)

- 35 Section 17(1) of the Charter recognises that families are the fundamental group unit of society and entitles families to protection by the society and the State. Section 17(1) is related to the s 13(a) right and an act or decision that unlawfully or arbitrarily interferes with a family is also likely to limit that family's entitlement to protection under section 17(1).
- 36 The Charter does not define the term 'family'; however, extrinsic materials and judicial consideration confirm that it is to be given a broad interpretation. As discussed above, it at least includes ties between near relatives and regard to other indicia of familial relationships including cohabitation, economic ties, and a regular and intense relationship. Cultural traditions may be relevant when considering whether a group of persons constitute a 'family' in a given case. In this respect, the cultural right in s 19(2)(c) of the Charter, which states that Aboriginal people must not be denied the right to maintain their kinship ties, is also relevant. As discussed above in relation to cultural rights, the concept of 'kinship' within Aboriginal culture is broader than that used in non-Aboriginal culture.
- 37 Section 17(2) recognises the particular vulnerability of children due to their age, and confers additional rights on them. Its scope is informed by the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child, which requires that in all actions concerning children, the best interests of the child shall be the primary consideration. However, it is worth noting that courts in the United Kingdom construe the best interests of the child as "a" primary consideration rather than "the" primary consideration.²⁷
- 38 Section 17 is closely related to section 13, to the extent that section 13 protects the rights of individuals not to have their family and home unlawfully or arbitrarily interfered with.

Right to take part in public life (section 18)

- 39 Section 18(1) of the Charter provides that every person in Victoria has the right, and is to have the opportunity, without discrimination, to take part in public affairs, directly or through freely chosen representatives. The rights to vote and to have access to the public service and public office in s 18(2)(a) and (b) may be regarded as specific aspects of the general right to direct participation in public affairs. This contemplates direct and indirect involvement in public affairs. Direct involvement may take various forms including the right to vote, and to participate in public debate. Every person must have the right to vote (s 18(2)(a)) and the opportunity to participate directly in public affairs, subject to reasonable limits (such as appropriate qualifications to be suitable for public office).

²⁵ See for example R (Countryside Alliance) v Attorney General [2008] AC 719; [2007] UKHL 52 at [58].

²⁶ Joseph and Castan, The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (3rd ed, Oxford University Press, 2013), [19.13].

²⁷ See ZH (Tanzania) v Home Secretary [2011] UKSC 4 at [25]–[26]; Zoumbas v Secretary of State for Home Department [2013] UKSC 74 at [10]; R (MG) v Secretary of State for Home Department [2018] EWHC Admin 31 at [87].

Cultural rights (section 19)

- 40 Section 19 of the Charter protects the right of all persons with a particular cultural, religious, racial or linguistic background to enjoy their culture, to declare and practise their religion and to use their language, in community with other persons of that background.
- 41 Section 19(2) bestows particular rights on Aboriginal people. Section 19(2)(c) of the Charter provides that Aboriginal people must not be denied the right to maintain their kinship ties. The concept of 'kinship' within Aboriginal culture differs from that used in non-Aboriginal culture; Aboriginal kinship networks are generally understood to extend broadly into the community, beyond a person's immediate family. The Pandemic Orders will operate to restrict the ability of Aboriginal people to maintain their kinship ties (with people other than those with whom they reside) in a physically proximate way given the strict limitations on both travel and gatherings. Funerals and mourning in particular are important communal activities in Aboriginal culture, with community members having a cultural obligation to attend in order to fulfil their cultural duties. Section 19(d) protects the rights of Aboriginal people to maintain their distinctive spiritual, material and economic relationship with the land and waters and other resources with which they have a connection under traditional laws and customs.

Property rights (section 20)

- 42 The right to property under section 20 of the Charter will be limited when all three of the following criteria are met: the interest interfered with must be "property", the interference must amount to a "deprivation" of property, and the deprivation must not be "in accordance with law". In *PJB v Melbourne Health (Patrick's Case)*²⁸ Bell J observed that in the Charter, "neither 'property' nor 'deprived' is defined. On first principles, these terms would be interpreted liberally and beneficially to encompass economic interests and deprivation in a broad sense. 'In accordance with law' has a particular meaning in this context."

Right to liberty and security of persons (section 21)

- 43 Section 21 of the Charter protects the right to liberty. The liberty right in s 21 reflects aspects of the common law right to personal liberty, which has been described as 'the most elementary and important of all common law rights'.²⁹ In particular, s 21(2) prohibits a person from being subjected to arbitrary detention, whilst s 21(3) prohibits a person from being deprived of their liberty except on grounds, and in accordance with procedures, established by law. Together, the effect of ss 21(2) and (3) is that the right to liberty may legitimately be constrained only in circumstances where the deprivation of liberty by detention is both lawful, in that it is specifically authorised by law, and not arbitrary, in that it is reasonable or proportionate in all the circumstances.
- 44 The scope of the right in s 21 extends to detention to prevent the spread of infectious diseases. Whether a particular restriction amounts to a 'deprivation of liberty' for the purpose of the right in s 21 is a question of degree or intensity.³⁰ Detention or deprivation of liberty does not necessarily require physical restraint; however, the right to liberty is concerned with the physical detention of the individual, and not mere restrictions on freedom of movement.³¹

²⁸ [2011] VSC 327 at [87].

²⁹ R v Foster (1993) 113 ALR 1, 8 quoting Fullager J in Trobridge v Hardy (1955) 94 CLR 147, 152.

³⁰ Kracke v Mental Health Review Board (2009) 29 VAR 1 at [664].

- 45 Where some Pandemic Orders may deprive a person of liberty by way of detention, any deprivation of liberty should not extend beyond the time during which the restraint is necessary on the basis of medical evidence. This approach is supported by a significant body of international jurisprudence, which accepts that detention can be justifiable if demonstrably necessary to prevent the spread of a serious infectious disease, where there are no other effective measures that are less restrictive of human rights.³²

Right to humane treatment when deprived of liberty (section 22)

- 46 Section 22 of the Charter imposes certain standards in respect of the treatment of people who are detained in Victoria. It requires that any person detained must be treated with dignity and humanity. This applies to people detained in the criminal justice system and in non-punitive or protective forms of detention such as the compulsory detention of persons with a mental illness, or for a public health purpose. Section 22 contains additional requirements to ensure differential treatment of accused persons detained who have not been convicted of any offence: s 22(2) and (3).

Rights of children in the criminal process (section 23), Right to a fair hearing (section 24), Rights in criminal proceedings (section 25)

- 47 Section 23 of the Charter stipulates additional requirements to those in section 22 for the humane treatment of children in detention in recognition that children are particularly vulnerable to harm in criminal detention and to discriminatory exclusion in the operation of the criminal law, and that governments and courts are therefore obliged to take all necessary measures to protect them from such harm and to ensure their participation in those processes.³³ Section 23 applies only with respect to the treatment of children in the criminal process and not to children in other forms of detention. The requirement that a child be brought to trial as “quickly as possible” recognises the widely accepted principle in international law that children should be detained for only the shortest appropriate time. Section 24(1) confers on a person charged with a criminal offence or a party to a civil proceeding the right to a “fair and public hearing” by a “competent, independent and impartial court or tribunal”. The requirement in section 24(1) that proceedings be “public” is a reflection of the common law principles of open justice.³⁴
- 48 Section 25 protects a number of rights in the criminal justice system, including the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty, the right of an accused person to adequate time and facilities to communicate with their lawyer contemplates that the accused should have the opportunity to do so in a confidential setting, the right to be tried in person and the right to be tried without unreasonable delay. An unreasonable delay for the purposes of section 25(2)(c) of ³¹ Ibid.

³² Ibid.; General Comment No 35 at [5].

³³ Pound & Evans, Annotated Victorian Charter of Rights, LawBook Co 2019 at [CHR.24.320] DPP v SL [2016] VSC 714 at [7]; DPP v SE [2017] VSC 13 at [11].

³⁴ Russell v Russell (1976) 134 CLR 495 at 520; Hogan v Hinch (2011) 243 CLR 506; [2011] HCA 4 at [20]–[21]; PQR v Secretary, Department of Justice and Regulation (2017) 53 VR 45; [2017] VSC 513 at [34]–[42].

the Charter is one which is “excessive, inordinate or unacceptable”.³⁵ The assessment of whether delay is “unreasonable” will depend upon all the circumstances.

³⁵ Baker (a pseudonym) v DPP (Vic) [2017] VSCA 58 at [67], [87].

PANDEMIC (OPEN PREMISES) ORDER 2022 (NO. 3)

Nature and extent of limitations

- 49 As noted in the Statement of Reasons for the Order, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will limit the following human rights:
- 49.1 Freedom from being subject to medical or scientific experimentation or treatment without his or her full, free and informed consent
 - 49.2 Freedom of movement
 - 49.3 Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief
- 50 Further, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will affect, but not limit, the following human rights:
- 50.1 Right to equality
 - 50.2 Privacy and reputation
 - 50.3 Freedom of expression
 - 50.4 Cultural rights
 - 50.5 Right to life
- 51 Each of the rights limited or otherwise affected is discussed below.

Protection from medical treatment without full, free and informed consent

- 52 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because its practical effect is to require a person to choose between being vaccinated or not being able to attend open premises, which includes a variety of venues including cinemas, restaurants, swimming pools and gyms.
- 53 I note that this position is consistent with adopted by the New Zealand Government in recent litigation in which mandatory vaccination orders were challenged and which an equivalent right was considered. The New Zealand High Court has accepted the correctness of that position on three occasions: GF v Minister of COVID-19 Response [2021] NZHC 2526 at [70]; Four Aviation Security Service Employees v Minister of Covid-19 Response [2021] NZHC 3012 at [28]; and Four Midwives v Minister for COVID-19 Response at [38].

Freedom of movement

- 54 Relevantly, the right to freedom of movement will be limited where a person is prevented from moving to, or from a particular place.
- 55 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because it prevents a person from attending a particular place — namely, open premises — if they are unvaccinated.
- 56 This position is consistent with that adopted by the New South Wales Supreme Court in Kassam v Hazzard [2021] NSWSC 1320 at [70], recognising that the Court was there concerned with the common law right to movement (not the Charter right). An appeal from that decision was dismissed: see Kassam v Hazzard [2021] NSWCA 299 at [111], [175].

Right to equality

57 This right is affected in the following ways:

57.1 To the extent that the Pandemic Orders treat persons who are not vaccinated unfavourably on the basis of that status that may engage the right to equality because it could amount to indirect discrimination where the effect of the Proposed Pandemic Order is to discriminate against a cohort of persons with a protected attribute.

57.2 A requirement to be vaccinated in order to access certain goods or services at an open premises may disadvantage people who object to taking the relevant vaccines for a variety of reasons, including those based on religious, cultural and personal health views and other belief systems. Whilst the latter are unlikely to involve attributes protected by the EO Act, religion and race are protected attributes, as is disability.

57.3 An exception to the requirement is provided for people who have certification from a medical practitioner that they are unable to receive a dose or a further dose of a relevant vaccine due to a medical contraindication. The requirement will therefore not be imposed on people with disabilities that preclude them being vaccinated.

57.4 A vaccination condition may disadvantage some people with protected attributes, including in relation to age, on the basis of that attribute. It is however noted that such a limitation will not constitute indirect discrimination if it is reasonable.

58 For those reasons, I consider that the Order affects the right. However in my opinion, the right is not limited by the Order because unreasonableness is a precondition to a finding of indirect discrimination. I consider the Order to be reasonable having regard to the matters set out in the Statement of Reasons.

Privacy and reputation

59 In my opinion, the Order affects the right to privacy because it operates to maintain a system which requires all patrons above the age of 18 years to show acceptable evidence that a person is fully vaccinated or an excepted person. Patrons of an open premises are required to comply with the operator's system. This obligation effectively requires those people required to provide this information to have taken steps to receive a vaccination or be subject to certain restrictions, including exclusion from that specified business or from a specified venue.

60 Further, the right to privacy includes a right to respect for bodily integrity. However, the Order does not physically force anyone to receive a COVID-19 vaccine. I therefore do not consider that the Order affects this aspect of the right.

61 However, although the Order affects the right to privacy, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order. That is because the right to privacy is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful.

62 Taking into account the matters set out in the Statement of Reasons and this Statement, my opinion is that the restrictions imposed by the order on privacy are not arbitrary.

Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, freedom of expression and cultural rights

63 These rights are affected in the following ways:

63.1 The requirement to show evidence of being vaccinated might be taken by some as a limit on those persons' rights to hold an opinion about vaccination without interference or that this would constitute an interference with their cultural or religious rights.

63.2 There are some belief systems which disagree with aspects of the way that certain vaccinations made if they are made with human tissues, and some have beliefs, associated with the body of a person being sacred, that the human body should not be in receipt of foreign chemicals or compounds.

63.3 The Order does not have the effect of altering or limiting a person's beliefs about vaccinations or restrict people from engaging in their cultural or religious practices in other ways, although they may require people to act inconsistently with those beliefs if they wish to be able to receive services from those specified businesses subject to the Orders.

64 For the above reasons, although this right is engaged, my opinion is that it is not limited by the Order.

Right to life

65 I consider the differential treatment of workers and patrons at open premises based on vaccination status assists in protecting vulnerable cohorts' right to life.

66 For that reason, the right to life may be positively affected by the Order. However, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

Importance of purpose of limitations

67 The purpose of the Order, and thus of the limitations, is set out at paragraph 351 of the Statement of Reasons. That is, to impose obligations in relation to vaccination against COVID-19 and other requirements, in order to address the serious public health risk posed to Victoria by COVID-19 and limit transmission of COVID-19 in open premises.

68 That is an important purpose.

Relationship between limitations and purpose

69 There is a rational connection between the limits imposed on human rights and the purpose identified at paragraph 67 above.

Any less restrictive means reasonably available to achieve the purpose that the limitation seeks to achieve

70 This issue is considered at paragraphs 379 to 391 of the Statement of Reasons.

PANDEMIC (WORKPLACE) ORDER 2022 (NO. 3)

Nature and extent of limitations

- 71 As noted in the Statement of Reasons for the Order, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will limit the following human rights:
- 71.1 Right to equality
 - 71.2 Freedom of movement
 - 71.3 Peaceful assembly and freedom of association
 - 71.4 Protection of families and children
 - 71.5 Cultural rights
- 72 Further, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will affect, but not limit, the following human rights:
- 72.1 Privacy and reputation
 - 72.2 Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief
 - 72.3 Freedom of expression
 - 72.4 Property rights
 - 72.5 Right to liberty and security of persons
 - 72.6 Right to humane treatment when deprived of liberty
 - 72.7 Right to life
- 73 Each of the rights limited or otherwise affected is discussed below.

Right to equality

- 74 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because:
- 74.1 A worker must not attend a work premises if they have been tested for COVID-19 because they are symptomatic and they are awaiting the result of that test.
 - 74.2 An employer must not require a worker to perform work if the worker is displaying one or more COVID-19 symptoms. An employer who has become aware of a suspected case must advise the worker to self-isolate immediately by either directing the worker to travel home immediately or to self-isolate and socially distance at the work premises, and must advise the worker to be tested for COVID-19 as soon as possible. A worker who receives a positive test result for COVID-19 must notify the operator of their work premises if the worker attended an indoor space at the work premises during their infectious period.

- 74.3 These restrictions can amount to unfavourable treatment on the basis of disability by requiring workers symptomatic with COVID-19 to return home or to self-isolate and socially distance at the work premises, and to take a COVID-19 test if the worker has not already done so.

Freedom of movement

75 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because:

- 75.1 A worker must not attend a work premises if they have been tested for COVID-19 because they are symptomatic and they are awaiting the result of that test.
- 75.2 An employer who has become aware of a suspected case or probable case must advise the worker to self-isolate immediately by either directing the worker to travel home immediately or to self-isolate and socially distance at the work premises, and must advise the worker to be tested for COVID-19 as soon as possible.
- 75.3 Freedom of movement of persons in Victoria who are going to work is therefore limited if the worker is symptomatic for COVID-19 or otherwise is a suspected case or probable case and the Order prevents the person from going to work.

Peaceful assembly and freedom of association

76 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because:

- 76.1 A worker must not attend a work premises if they have been tested for COVID-19 because they are symptomatic and they are awaiting the result of that test.
- 76.2 An employer must not require a worker to perform work if the worker is displaying one or more COVID-19 symptoms. An employer who has become aware of a suspected case must advise the worker to self-isolate immediately by either directing the worker to travel home immediately or to self-isolate and socially distance at the work premises, and must advise the worker to be tested for COVID-19 as soon as possible.
- 76.3 The Order limits this right because persons who are self-quarantining/isolating cannot freely gather with others, including to peacefully to pursue common interests or further common purposes (including for a demonstration).

Protection of families and children, and cultural rights

77 In my opinion, the Order limits these rights because:

- 77.1 An employer who has become aware of a suspected case or probable case must advise the worker to self-isolate immediately by either directing the worker to travel home immediately or to self-isolate and socially distance at the work premises, and must advise the worker to be tested for COVID-19 as soon as possible.
- 77.2 A worker who has been notified that they may have been exposed to COVID-19 must self-quarantine immediately; must take a COVID-19 test within 24 hours; must remain in self-quarantine until they receive a negative test result; and must notify the operator of the work premises of their test result.

- 77.3 For workers who must self-quarantine under the Order and choose to self-quarantine away from their family, this can cause disruptions in relationships, economic difficulties, isolation from culture and traditions, and uncertainty and anxiety. Self-isolation and self-quarantine measures can therefore be characterised as an incursion into the right to protection of families and children.
- 77.4 Self-isolation or self-quarantine measures can also constitute an incursion into the rights of people of different cultural, religious, racial or linguistic backgrounds to practice their culture, religion, or language to the extent that the short period prevents them from doing so. While there are many ways of enjoying one's culture, religion, or language at home or online, there may be activities which can only be done face-to-face or in a certain location outside the home.

Privacy and reputation

- 78 In my opinion, the Order affects the right to privacy because:
- 78.1 An employer must keep a record of all persons who attend the work premises, must use the Victorian Government QR code system and must provide an alternative record-keeping system for people who cannot use the QR code system, with some exceptions.
- 78.2 A worker who receives a positive test result for COVID-19 must notify the operator of their work premises if the worker attended an indoor space at the work premises during their infectious period.
- 78.3 As soon as an employer becomes aware that a diagnosed person has attended the work premises during the person's infectious period, the operator must notify the Department, WorkSafe, and the health and safety representative at the work premises; must advise all workers to be tested for COVID-19 and self-quarantine if they become symptomatic; and must put in place appropriate control and/or risk management measures to reduce the risk of spreading COVID-19.
- 78.4 A worker who has been notified that they may have been exposed to COVID-19 must self-quarantine immediately; must take a COVID-19 test within 24 hours; must remain in self-quarantine until they receive a negative test result; and must notify the operator of the work premises of their test result.
- 78.5 This information would constitute personal and health information and its provision would therefore be an interference with privacy. They are subject to existing privacy legislation and principles, as referred to in the Order. Details sought are limited to those necessary to contact trace if necessary.
- 79 However, although the Order affects the right to privacy, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order. That is because the right to privacy is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful.
- 80 Further:
- 80.1 An employer must not collect personal information unless it is necessary under the Order, and must use reasonable endeavours to protect the personal information from use or disclosure. The personal information is intended to be destroyed 28 days after collection except where permitted or required to be retained. An employer must keep logs showing compliance with the order.

- 80.2 While an incursion on privacy, the Order is not an arbitrary incursion because only the details required to establish risk and contact trace are sought.
- 81 Having regard to those matters, and the other matters set out in the Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, and freedom of expression

- 82 In my opinion, this right is affected because:
- 82.1 The Order creates a significant impost on business owners, employers, property owners, and workers to comply with public health policy measures that are frequently updated to adapt to a fluid disease. The Order creates responsibilities to collect information, to self-quarantine if symptomatic, to send workers home if symptomatic or a probable case, and to use the Victorian Government QR code system, among others.
- 82.2 Those who are firmly opposed to restrictions on their daily activities may argue that the requirements the Order creates limits their rights to hold an opinion about the pandemic or its management without interference. The Order does not preclude a person from holding an opinion or belief either for, or against, the Order, management of the pandemic response, or the pandemic. The Order penalises non-compliance but does not have the effect of altering or limiting a person's beliefs and does not fully inhibit those beliefs from being expressed or shared while complying with the Order, such as through online engagement.
- 82.3 For those reasons, although the Order affects the right, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

Property rights

- 83 In my opinion, this right is affected in the following ways:
- 83.1 The Order creates an impost on business owners seeking to enjoy their property rights so they can operate their businesses without interference. Sending a worker home to self-quarantine is likely to cause meaningful detriment to a business.
- 83.2 This Order may have the effect of interfering with the rights of property owners and other persons with property rights, whose use or enjoyment of the property (real or personal) will be affected by the operation of the Order. The Order might in the short term reduce or affect the capacity of certain businesses to generate income from their real and personal property. If the business and its assets are owned by an individual, and that reduction in capacity continues for a lengthy period of time, it may over time become a substantial restriction on the use of a person's property.
- 83.3 The Order does not currently create a deprivation of property merely by impacting some workforce capacity, although it is an impediment to business. Nonetheless, even if the Orders impose measures that constitute a deprivation of property, it will occur in accordance with law. Lawful and non-arbitrary interference with property will engage, but not limit, property rights.

83.4 Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful. Further, having regard to the public health advice given by the CHO and the matters discussed in my Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

83.5 For those reasons, although the Order affects the right, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

Right to liberty and security of persons, and humane treatment when deprived of liberty

84 In my opinion, these rights are affected because:

84.1 An employer who has become aware of a suspected case or probable case must advise the worker to self-isolate immediately by either directing the worker to travel home immediately or to self-isolate and socially distance at the work premises, and must advise the worker to be tested for COVID-19 as soon as possible.

84.2 A worker who has been notified that they may have been exposed to COVID-19 must self-quarantine immediately; must take a COVID-19 test within 24 hours; must remain in self-quarantine until they receive a negative test result; and must notify the operator of the work premises of their test result.

84.3 Requirements of self-isolation and self-quarantine place significant restrictions on the ability of people to move freely.

85 However, the right to liberty and security is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful.

86 Further, the Order requires exposed persons to self-quarantine only for the time the medical evidence suggests is appropriate to make sure that a person is not at risk of transmitting COVID-19.

87 Having regard to those matters, and the other matters set out in the Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

88 Accordingly, in my opinion, although the Order affects the right to liberty and security, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

89 Because the right to liberty and security is not limited, no issue arises about humane treatment when deprived of liberty (because the threshold is not met). Therefore, in my opinion, it is not limited.

Right to life

90 The right to life may be positively affected by the Order. However, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

Importance of purpose of limitations

91 The purpose of the Order, and thus of the limitations, is set out at paragraph 398 of the Statement of Reasons. That is, to limit the number of Victorians attending work premises to assist in reducing the frequency and scale of outbreaks of COVID-19 in Victorian workplaces and to establish more specific obligations on employers and workers in relation to managing the risk associated with COVID-19 transmission in the work premises.

92 That is an important purpose.

Relationship between limitations and purpose

93 There is a rational connection between the limits imposed on human rights and the purpose identified at paragraph 91 above.

Any less restrictive means reasonably available to achieve the purpose that the limitation seeks to achieve

94 This issue is considered at paragraphs 421 to 423 of the Statement of Reasons.

PANDEMIC (QUARANTINE, ISOLATION AND TESTING) ORDER 2022 (NO.4)

Nature and extent of limitations

95 As noted in the Statement of Reasons for the Order, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will limit the following human rights:

95.1 Right to equality;

95.2 Right to freedom from being subjected to medical or scientific experimentation or treatment without his or her full, free and informed consent;

95.3 Freedom of movement;

95.4 Peaceful assembly and freedom of association;

95.5 Protection of families and children; and

95.6 Cultural rights.

96 Further, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will affect, but not limit, the following human rights:

96.1 Right to life;

96.2 Privacy and reputation;

96.3 Freedom of thought, conscience and religion and belief;

96.4 Freedom of expression;

96.5 Right to liberty and security of persons; and

96.6 Right to humane treatment when deprived of liberty.

97 Each of the rights limited or otherwise affected is discussed below.

Right to equality

98 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because the restrictions imposed by the Order can amount to unfavourable treatment on the basis of disability, or association with a person with a disability (otherwise characterisable as a person imputed to have a disability), by requiring people with the disability of infection with COVID-19 to self-isolate, to take reasonable steps to inform their social contacts and close contacts of their disability of infection with COVID-19, and, to require those people associated with that person infected with COVID-19 to self-quarantine.

Freedom of movement

- 99 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because persons who are required to self-isolate or self-quarantine are permitted to leave the premises at which they are isolating/quarantining for limited purposes. They are therefore not able to move freely.

Peaceful assembly and freedom of association

- 100 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because persons who are self-quarantining/isolating cannot freely gather with others, including to peacefully to pursue common interests or further common purposes (including for a demonstration).

Protection of families and children, and cultural rights

- 101 In my opinion, the Order limits these rights because:

101.1 A person may choose to self-isolate at a premises that may not be their home.

101.2 Given that children under 12 years remain ineligible for vaccination, many people required to self-isolate or self-quarantine have been young children and their families. Even where children are older or a family is constituted only of adults, many people choose to self-isolate or self-quarantine away from their family. This can cause disruptions in relationships, economic difficulties, isolation from culture and traditions, and uncertainty and anxiety. Self-isolation and self-quarantine measures can therefore be characterised as an incursion into the right to protection of families and children.

101.3 Self-isolation or self-quarantine measures can also constitute an incursion into the rights of people of different cultural, religious, racial or linguistic backgrounds to practice their culture, religion, or language to the extent that the short period prevents them from doing so. While there are many ways of enjoying one's culture, religion, or language at home or online, there may be activities which can only be done face-to-face or in a certain location outside the home.

Right to life

- 102 The right to life may be positively affected by the Order. However, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

Right to freedom from being subjected to medical or scientific experimentation or treatment without his or her full, free and informed consent

- 103 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because persons may feel compelled to undertake a COVID-19 test. I have assumed that taking a test for COVID-19, whether through a PCR test or rapid antigen test, constitutes medical treatment: see De Bruyn v Victorian Institute of Forensic Mental Health (2016) 48 VR 647; [2016] VSC 111 at [159]. In New Zealand, the taking of a swab to obtain a bodily sample for forensic purposes has been held not to be medical treatment,³⁶ however, the taking of a blood sample for the purposes of determining paternity was considered medical treatment.³⁷ The Order does not impose an obligation to be tested, but persons may have to take self-quarantine/isolate for a longer period if they do not take a test.

³⁶ Taylor v Attorney-General HC Auckland CIV-2010-485-226, 9 July 2011, [32] and [36] and the cases considered therein.

Right to privacy and reputation

104 In my opinion, the Order affects the right to privacy because:

104.1 A diagnosed person or probable case must inform other people residing at the premises that the person has been diagnosed and they have chosen to self-isolate at those premises, and must notify the Department of that address and the name of any other person residing at the premises.

104.2 A diagnosed person or probable case must take reasonable steps to inform their close contacts and social contacts that they have been diagnosed with COVID-19.

104.3 A diagnosed person or probable case must also inform the operator of their work premises or educational facility of their diagnosis, if the diagnosed person attended an indoor space.

104.4 These operators must collect, record, and store lists of employees or enrolled persons, and the results of the COVID-19 tests any of those persons have taken.

105 However, although the Order affects the right to privacy, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order. That is because the right to privacy is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful.

106 Further, the degree of information required to be disclosed and stored by the Order is intended to be limited to that necessary to identifying which people are at risk of becoming infected with COVID-19. Having regard to that matter, and the other matters set out in the Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, and freedom of expression

107 In my opinion, this right is affected because:

107.1 Those who are firmly opposed to restrictions on their daily activities may argue that the requirements the Order creates limits their rights to hold an opinion about the pandemic or its management without interference. The Order does not preclude a person from holding an opinion or belief either for, or against, the Order, management of the pandemic response, or the pandemic. The Order penalises non-compliance but does not have the effect of altering or limiting a person's beliefs and does not fully inhibit those beliefs from being expressed or shared while complying with the Order, such as through online engagement.

107.2 For those reasons, although the Order affects the right, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

³⁷ Cairns v James [1992] NZFLR 353 (HC), 356.

Right to liberty and security of persons and right to humane treatment when deprived of liberty

- 108 In my opinion, these rights are affected because the requirements of self-isolation and self-quarantine place significant restrictions on the ability of people to move freely.
- 109 However, the right to liberty and security is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful.
- 110 Further:
- 110.1 The Order deprives people of liberty only for the time the medical evidence suggests is appropriate to make sure that a person is not at risk of transmitting COVID-19, where less restrictive measures have not been enough to prevent a person from becoming infected with COVID-19 or being exposed to a diagnosed person.
- 110.2 Persons at lower risk are only required to self-quarantine until a negative COVID-19 test result is returned, while diagnosed persons are required to self-isolate for the 10-day period known to be the most infectious period following diagnosis.
- 111 Having regard to those matters, and the other matters set out in the Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.
- 112 Accordingly, in my opinion, although the Order affects the right to liberty and security, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.
- 113 Because the right to liberty and security is not limited, no issue arises about humane treatment when deprived of liberty (because the threshold is not met). Therefore, in my opinion, it is not limited.

Importance of purpose of limitations

- 114 The purpose of the Order, and thus of the limitations, is set out at paragraph 454 of the Statement of Reasons. That is, is to limit the movement of, and obligate testing for, people who are infected with, or sufficiently proximate to, COVID-19 in order to limit the spread of COVID-19 in the Victorian community.
- 115 That is an important purpose.

Relationship between limitations and purpose

- 116 There is a rational connection between the limits imposed on human rights and the purpose identified at paragraph 114 above.

Any less restrictive means reasonably available to achieve the purpose that the limitation seeks to achieve

- 117 This issue is considered at paragraphs 487 to 488 of the Statement of Reasons.

PANDEMIC (ADDITIONAL INDUSTRY OBLIGATIONS) ORDER 2022 (NO. 3)

Nature and extent of limitations

118 As noted in the Statement of Reasons for the Order, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will limit the following human rights:

118.1 Freedom of movement

118.2 Cultural rights

118.3 Freedom from torture, cruel inhuman and degrading treatment (including protection from medical treatment without full, free and informed consent)

119 Further, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will affect, but not limit, the following human rights:

119.1 Privacy and reputation

119.2 Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief

119.3 Freedom of expression

119.4 Property rights

119.5 Right to liberty and security of persons

119.6 Right to humane treatment when deprived of liberty

119.7 Right to life

120 Each of the rights limited or otherwise affected is discussed below.

Freedom of movement

121 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because:

121.1 An employer must direct a worker to undertake a COVID-19 PCR test as soon as possible, and self-isolate until a negative COVID-19 PCR test result is received, if during surveillance testing a worker is found to have a positive COVID-19 rapid antigen test result or two successive invalid COVID-19 rapid antigen test results.

121.2 Freedom of movement of persons in Victoria is limited if diagnosed with COVID-19, living with a diagnosed person, or having been in close contact with a diagnosed person.

Cultural rights

122 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because:

122.1 Depending on the industry, the additional obligation industries must ensure that workers wear the appropriate level of personal protective equipment or wear a face covering.

122.2 If wearing personal protective equipment or a face covering interferes with a person's choice to exercise cultural, religious, or linguistic practices in the workplace, this would constitute an incursion into that person's cultural, religious, racial, or linguistic rights to the extent that those rights are not already limited by attending work with occupational safety or uniform requirements.

Freedom from torture, cruel or inhuman treatment (including protection from medical treatment without full, free and informed consent)

123 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because persons may be directed by their employer pursuant to the Order to undertake a COVID-19 test and may otherwise prevent a person from having an elective surgery procedure completed during the period of the order. I have assumed that taking a test for COVID-19 constitutes medical treatment: see De Bruyn v Victorian Institute of Forensic Mental Health (2016) 48 VR 647; [2016] VSC 111 at [159]. In New Zealand, the taking of a swab to obtain a bodily sample for forensic purposes has been held not to be medical treatment,³⁸ however, the taking of a blood sample for the purposes of determining paternity was considered medical treatment.³⁹

Privacy and reputation

124 In my opinion, the Order affects this right because:

124.1 The additional obligation industries must conduct surveillance testing and keep records of surveillance testing, unless the worker was a confirmed case of COVID-19 within the last 30 days, in line with the medical evidence that suggests re-infection is possible within 30 days rather than the previously established period of 90 days.

124.2 Depending on the industry, the additional obligation industries must ensure that workers provide a written declaration about additional workplaces if working in two or more.

124.3 This information would constitute personal and health information and its provision to gain access to the care facility would therefore be an interference with privacy.

125 However, although the Order affects the right to privacy, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order. That is because the right to privacy is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful.

126 Further:

126.1 The collection of information is subject to existing privacy legislation and principles.

126.2 Details sought are limited to those necessary to establish risk of COVID-19 or to contact trace if anyone involved in the visit tests positive to COVID-19. While an incursion on privacy, it should not be an arbitrary incursion because only the details required to establish risk and contact trace are sought.

³⁸ Taylor v Attorney-General HC Auckland CIV-2010-485-226, 9 July 2011, [32] and [36] and the cases considered therein.

³⁹ Cairns v James [1992] NZFLR 353 (HC), 356.

127 Having regard to those matters, and the other matters set out in the Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, and freedom of expression

128 In my opinion, these rights are limited in the following ways:

128.1 Depending on the industry, additional obligation industries must ensure that workers wear the appropriate level of personal protective equipment or wear a face covering.

128.2 Wearing personal protective equipment or a face covering does not of itself take away a worker's right to hold an opinion and express them. A worker may wear personal protective equipment or a face covering and still express a belief that such equipment is unnecessary or oppressive.

Property rights

129 In my opinion, this right is affected because:

129.1 The Order creates an impost on business owners seeking to enjoy their property rights so they can operate their businesses without interference. Sending a worker home to self-quarantine is likely to cause meaningful detriment to a business.

129.2 This Order may have the effect of interfering with the rights of property owners and other persons with property rights, whose use or enjoyment of the property (real or personal) will be affected by the operation of the Order. The Order might in the short term reduce or affect the capacity of certain businesses to generate income from their real and personal property. If the business and its assets are owned by an individual, and that reduction in capacity continues for a lengthy period of time, it may over time become a substantial restriction on the use of a person's property.

129.3 The Order does not currently create a deprivation of property merely by impacting some workforce capacity, although it is an impediment to business. Nonetheless, even if the Orders impose measures that constitute a deprivation of property, it will occur in accordance with law. Lawful and non-arbitrary interference with property will engage, but not limit, property rights.

129.4 Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful. Further, having regard to the public health advice given by the CHO and the matters discussed in my Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

Right to liberty and security of persons, and humane treatment when deprived of liberty

130 In my opinion, these rights are affected in the following ways:

130.1 An employer who has become aware of a suspected case must advise the worker to self-isolate immediately by either directing the worker to travel home immediately or to self-isolate and socially distance at the work premises, and must advise the worker to be tested for COVID-19 as soon as possible.

130.2 Requirements of self-isolation place significant restrictions on the ability of people to move freely.

130.3 If the worker takes a COVID-19 test, the period of self-isolation is only until a negative COVID-19 test result is received and may go about their day at their place of self-quarantine, largely undisturbed.

131 However, the right to liberty and security is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful.

132 Further, the Order requires exposed persons to self-isolate only for the time the medical evidence suggests is appropriate to make sure that a person is not at risk of transmitting COVID-19.

133 Having regard to those matters, and the other matters set out in the Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

134 Accordingly, in my opinion, although the Order affects the right to liberty and security, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

135 Because the right to liberty and security is not limited, no issue arises about humane treatment when deprived of liberty (because the threshold is not met). Therefore, in my opinion, it is not limited.

Right to life

136 The right to life may be positively affected by the Order. However, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

Importance of purpose of limitations

137 The purpose of the Order, and thus of the limitations, is set out at paragraph 427 of the Statement of Reasons. That is, to establish additional specific obligations on employers and workers in specific industries in relation to managing the risk associated with COVID-19 transmission in the work premises.

138 That is an important purpose.

Relationship between limitations and purpose

139 There is a rational connection between the limits imposed on human rights and the purpose identified at paragraph 137 above.

Any less restrictive means reasonably available to achieve the purpose that the limitation seeks to achieve

140 This issue is considered at paragraphs 449 to 451 of the Statement of Reasons.

PANDEMIC COVID-19 MANDATORY VACCINATION (GENERAL WORKERS) ORDER 2022 (NO. 2)

Nature and extent of limitations

141 As noted in the Statement of Reasons for the Order, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will limit the following human rights:

141.1 Freedom from being subject to medical or scientific experimentation or treatment without his or her full, free and informed consent;

141.2 Freedom of movement;

141.3 Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief;

141.4 Freedom of expression; and

141.5 Cultural rights.

142 Further, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will affect, but not limit, the following human rights:

142.1 Right to equality;

142.2 Privacy and reputation;

142.3 Property rights; and

142.4 Right to life.

143 Each of the rights limited or otherwise affected is discussed below.

Freedom from torture, cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment (including protection from medical treatment without full, free and informed consent)

144 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because its practical effect is to require a person to choose between being vaccinated or not attend the workplace. In many cases, not attending the workplace may put the person at risk of losing their employment.

145 I note that this position is consistent with adopted by the New Zealand Government in recent litigation in which mandatory vaccination orders were challenged and in which an equivalent right was considered. The New Zealand High Court has accepted the correctness of that position on three occasions: GF v Minister of COVID-19 Response [2021] NZHC 2526 at [70]; Four Aviation Security Service Employees v Minister of Covid-19 Response [2021] NZHC 3012 at [28]; and Four Midwives v Minister for COVID-19 Response at [38].

Freedom of movement

146 Relevantly, the right to freedom of movement will be limited where a person is prevented from moving to, or from a particular place.

- 147 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because it prevents a person from attending a particular place — namely, the workplace — if they are unvaccinated.
- 148 This position is consistent with that adopted by the New South Wales Supreme Court in Kassam v Hazzard [2021] NSWSC 1320 at [70], recognising that the Court was there concerned with the common law right to movement (not the Charter right). An appeal from that decision was dismissed: see Kassam v Hazzard [2021] NSWCA 299 at [111], [175].

Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, freedom of expression, and cultural rights

- 149 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because:
- 149.1 Those who are firmly opposed to vaccinations (or to these specific vaccines) might view the requirement to show evidence of being vaccinated as limiting those persons' rights to hold an opinion about vaccination without interference, or, that this constitutes an interference with their cultural or religious rights.
- 149.2 There are some belief systems which disagree with aspects of the way that certain vaccinations are made if they are made with human tissues, and some have beliefs, associated with the body of a person being sacred, that the human body should not be in receipt of foreign chemicals or compounds.
- 149.3 The Order does not have the effect of altering or limiting a person's beliefs about vaccinations or restrict people from engaging in their cultural or religious practices in other ways, although the Order may require people to act inconsistently with those beliefs if they wish to be able to attend for work at their workplace.

Right to equality

- 150 This right is affected in the following ways:
- 150.1 To the extent that the Order treats persons who are not vaccinated unfavourably based on that status, that may engage the right to equality because it could amount to indirect discrimination where the effect of the Order is to discriminate against a cohort of persons with a protected attribute.
- 150.2 A requirement to be vaccinated to attend work premises and perform work on-site may disadvantage people who object to taking the relevant vaccines for a variety of reasons, including those based on religious, cultural and personal health views and other belief systems. Whilst the latter are unlikely to involve attributes protected by the Equal Opportunity Act 2010 (Vic), religion and race are protected attributes, as is disability. Reasonable measures will not constitute indirect discrimination.
- 150.3 An exception to the requirement is provided for people who have certification from a medical practitioner that they are unable to receive a dose or a further dose of a relevant vaccine due to a medical contraindication. The requirement will therefore not be imposed on people with disabilities that preclude them being vaccinated.
- 150.4 Although a vaccination condition may disadvantage some people with protected attributes, on the basis of that attribute, such as people with religious objections, this will not constitute indirect discrimination if it is reasonable, which it appears to be.

150.5 An exclusion from a physical workplace on the basis of vaccination status may be particularly onerous for single parents, for parents of younger children, and for parents of multiple children (who may find it impossible to work effectively at home). This may cause difficulties for those persons and, further, may disproportionately affect women who typically bear more of the child-minding or caring responsibilities in the home. The exact impact of the restriction on a particular person will depend on the nature of each person's condition or circumstances. This may amount to a requirement or condition that disadvantages women.

151 For those reasons, I consider that the Order affects the right. However in my opinion, the right is not limited by the Order because unreasonableness is a precondition to a finding of indirect discrimination. I consider the Order to be reasonable having regard to the matters set out in the Statement of Reasons.

Privacy and reputation

152 In my opinion, the Order affects the right to privacy because it requires employers of general workers who work outside their ordinary place of residence to collect the worker's vaccination status and to disclose that information to an Authorised Officer upon request.

153 Further, the right to privacy includes a right to respect for bodily integrity. However, the Order does not physically force anyone to receive a COVID-19 vaccine. I therefore do not consider that the Order affects this right.

154 However, although the Order affects the right to privacy, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order. That is because the right to privacy is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful.

155 Further:

155.1 The collection and provision of any vaccination information will be subject to the existing law, including the Health Records Act 2001. Once collected it is noted that the information will be subject to the existing protections that exist in relation to the use, storage and control of this sensitive information.

155.2 The purpose of the collection of the information is to ensure that only vaccinated people are present in relevant workplaces. Without this information the vaccination requirement cannot be enforced.

156 Having regard to those matters, and the other matters set out in the Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

Property rights

157 In my opinion, the Order affects this right because it may interfere with the rights of property owners and other persons with property rights, whose use or enjoyment of the property may be limited (real or personal).

158 In particular, the Pandemic Orders may restrict the ability of businesses to operate if some of their workforce are unable, or unwilling, to be vaccinated. The Order might in the short term reduce or affect the capacity of certain businesses to generate income from their real and personal property.

159 If the business and its assets are owned by an individual, and that reduction in capacity continues for a lengthy period of time, it may over time become a substantial restriction on the use of a person's property.

160 However, I note that the limits on work outside the ordinary place of residence under the Order will only apply to general workers for whom it is reasonably practicable for the person to work at the person's ordinary place of residence.

161 Further, although the Order affects the right, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order. That is because the right is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful. Further, having regard to the public health advice given by the CHO and the matters discussed in my Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

Right to life

162 I consider the differential treatment of general workers based on vaccination status assists in protecting vulnerable cohorts' right to life.

163 For that reason, the right to life may be positively affected by the Order. However, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

Importance of purpose of limitations

164 The purpose of the Order, and thus of the limitations, is set out at paragraph 82 of the Statement of Reasons. That is, to impose obligations upon employers in relation to the vaccination of general workers, in order to limit the spread of COVID-19 within the population of those workers.

165 That is an important purpose.

Relationship between limitations and purpose

166 There is a rational connection between the limits imposed on human rights and the purpose identified at paragraph 164 above.

Any less restrictive means reasonably available to achieve the purpose that the limitation seeks to achieve

167 This issue is considered at paragraphs 103 to 116 of the Statement of Reasons.

PANDEMIC COVID-19 MANDATORY VACCINATION (SPECIFIED FACILITIES) ORDER 2022 (NO. 2)

Nature and extent of limitations

168 As noted in the Statement of Reasons for the Order, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will limit the following human rights:

168.1 Freedom from being subject to medical or scientific experimentation or treatment without his or her full, free and informed consent;

168.2 Freedom of movement;

168.3 Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief;

168.4 Freedom of expression; and

168.5 Cultural Rights.

169 Further, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will affect, but not limit, the following human rights:

169.1 Right to equality;

169.2 Privacy and reputation;

169.3 Property rights; and

169.4 Right to life.

170 Each of the rights limited or otherwise affected is discussed below.

Protection from medical treatment without full, free and informed consent

171 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because its practical effect is to require a person to choose between being vaccinated – including with a booster vaccine dose for some workers, or not attend the workplace. In many cases, not attending the workplace may put the person at risk of losing their employment.

172 I note that this position is consistent with that adopted by the New Zealand Government in recent litigation in which mandatory vaccination orders were challenged and which an equivalent right was considered. The New Zealand High Court has accepted the correctness of that position on three occasions: GF v Minister of COVID-19 Response [2021] NZHC 2526 at [70]; Four Aviation Security Service Employees v Minister of Covid-19 Response [2021] NZHC 3012 at [28]; and Four Midwives v Minister for COVID-19 Response at [38].

Freedom of movement

173 Relevantly, the right to freedom of movement will be limited where a person is prevented from moving to, or from a particular place.

- 174 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because it prevents a person from attending a particular place – namely, the workplace – if they are unvaccinated.
- 175 This position is consistent with that adopted by the New South Wales Supreme Court in Kassam v Hazzard [2021] NSWSC 1320 at [70], recognising that the Court was there concerned with the common law right to movement (not the Charter right). An appeal from that decision was dismissed: see Kassam v Hazzard [2021] NSWCA 299 at [111], [175].

Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, freedom of expression and cultural rights

- 176 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because:
- 176.1 Those who are firmly opposed to vaccinations (or to these specific vaccines) might view the requirement to show evidence of being vaccinated as limiting those persons' rights to hold an opinion about vaccination without interference, or, that this constitutes an interference with their cultural or religious rights.
- 176.2 There are some belief systems which disagree with aspects of the way that certain vaccinations are made if they are made with human tissues, and some have beliefs, associated with the body of a person being sacred, that the human body should not be in receipt of foreign chemicals or compounds.
- 176.3 The Order does not have the effect of altering or limiting a person's beliefs about vaccinations or restricting people from engaging in their cultural or religious practices in other ways, although the Order may require people to act inconsistently with those beliefs if they wish to be able to attend for work at their workplace.

Right to equality

- 177 This right is affected in the following ways:
- 177.1 To the extent that the Order treats persons who are not vaccinated unfavourably based on that status that may engage the right to equality because it could amount to indirect discrimination where the effect of the Order is to discriminate against a cohort of persons with a protected attribute.
- 177.2 A requirement to be vaccinated to attend work premises and perform work on site may disadvantage people who object to taking the relevant vaccines for a variety of reasons, including those based on religious, cultural and personal health views and other belief systems. Whilst the latter are unlikely to involve attributes protected by the Equal Opportunity Act 2010 (Vic), religion and race are protected attributes as is disability. Reasonable measures will not constitute indirect discrimination.
- 177.3 An exception to the requirement is provided for people who have certification from a medical practitioner that they are unable to receive a dose or a further dose of a relevant vaccine due to a medical contraindication. The requirement will therefore not be imposed on people with disabilities that preclude them being vaccinated.
- 177.4 An exclusion from a physical workplace on the basis of vaccination status may be particularly onerous for single parents, for parents of younger children, and for parents of multiple children (who may find it impossible to work effectively at home). This may cause difficulties for those persons and, further, may disproportionately affect women who typically bear more of the child-minding or caring responsibilities in the home. The exact impact of the restriction on a particular person will depend on the nature of each person's condition or circumstances. This may amount to a requirement or condition that disadvantages women. However indirect discrimination will not arise if the requirement is reasonable, as is likely to be the case here, having regard to the serious, avoidable and irreversible adverse health consequences that uncontrolled transmission of COVID-19 may have.

177.5 The obligation to require workers to wear additional PPE, including face masks and face shields, could conceivably amount to indirect discrimination on the basis of a person's physical features or religious belief or activity (for example, where a person wears a beard for religious purposes) or on the basis of disability (for example, for people with hearing impairments who rely on lip-reading or for those with breathing or lung difficulties).

178 For those reasons, I consider that the Order affects the right. However in my opinion, the right is not limited by the Order because unreasonableness is a precondition to a finding of indirect discrimination. I consider the Order to be reasonable having regard to the matters set out in the Statement of Reasons.

Privacy and reputation

179 In my opinion, the Order affects the right to privacy because it requires employers to collect the work's vaccination status – including in relation to any booster vaccine dose, and to disclose that information to an Authorised Officer upon request.

180 Further the right to privacy includes a right to respect for bodily integrity. However, the Order does not physically force anyone to receive a COVID-19 vaccine. I therefore do not consider that the Order affects this aspect of the right.

181 However, although the Order affects the right to privacy, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order. That is because the right to privacy is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful.

182 Further:

182.1 The collection and provision of any vaccination information will be subject to the existing law, including the Health Records Act 2001. Once collected it is noted that the information will be subject to the existing protections that exist in relation to the use, storage and control of this sensitive information.

182.2 The purpose of the collection of the information is to ensure that only vaccinated people are present in relevant workplaces. Without this information the vaccination requirement cannot be enforced.

183 Having regard to those matters, and the other matters set out in the Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

Property rights

- 184 In my opinion, the Order affects this right because it may interfere with the rights of property owners and other persons with property rights, whose use or enjoyment of the property may be limited (real or personal).
- 185 In particular, the Pandemic Orders may restrict the ability of businesses to operate if some of their workforce are unable, or unwilling, to be vaccinated. The Order might in the short term reduce or affect the capacity of certain businesses to generate income from their real and personal property.
- 186 If the business and its assets are owned by an individual, and that reduction in capacity continues for a lengthy period of time, it may over time become a substantial restriction on the use of a person's property.
- 187 However, although the Order affects the right, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order. That is because the right is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful. Further, having regard to the public health advice given by the CHO and the matters discussed in my Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

Right to life

- 188 I consider the differential treatment of workers at specified facilities based on vaccination status assists in protecting vulnerable cohorts' right to life.
- 189 For that reason, the right to life may be positively affected by the Order. However, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

Importance of purpose of limitations

- 190 The purpose of the Order, and thus of the limitations, is set out at paragraph 122 of the Statement of Reasons. That is, to impose obligations upon operators of specified facilities in relation to the vaccination of workers, in order to limit the spread of COVID-19 within the population in these settings.
- 191 Given the significance of workplaces as a site of transmission throughout the pandemic, this purpose is considered very important.

Relationship between limitations and purpose

- 192 There is a rational connection between the limits imposed on human rights and the purpose identified at paragraph 190 above.

Any less restrictive means reasonably available to achieve the purpose that the limitation seeks to achieve

- 193 This issue is considered at paragraphs 143 to 157 of the Statement of Reasons.

PANDEMIC COVID-19 MANDATORY VACCINATION (SPECIFIED WORKERS) ORDER 2022 (NO. 2)

Nature and extent of limitations

194 As noted in the Statement of Reasons for the Order, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will limit the following human rights:

194.1 Freedom from being subject to medical or scientific experimentation or treatment without his or her full, free and informed consent;

194.2 Freedom of movement;

194.3 Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief;

194.4 Freedom of expression; and

194.5 Cultural rights.

195 Further, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will affect, but not limit, the following human rights:

195.1 Right to equality;

195.2 Privacy and reputation;

195.3 Property rights; and

195.4 Right to life.

196 Each of the rights limited or otherwise affected is discussed below.

Protection from medical treatment without full, free and informed consent

197 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because its practical effect is to require a person to choose between being vaccinated – including with a booster vaccine dose for some workers, or not attend the workplace. In many cases, not attending the workplace may put the person at risk of losing their employment.

198 I note that this position is consistent with adopted by the New Zealand Government in recent litigation in which mandatory vaccination orders were challenged and which an equivalent right was considered. The New Zealand High Court has accepted the correctness of that position on three occasions: GF v Minister of COVID-19 Response [2021] NZHC 2526 at [70]; Four Aviation Security Service Employees v Minister of Covid-19 Response [2021] NZHC 3012 at [28]; and Four Midwives v Minister for COVID-19 Response at [38].

Freedom of movement

199 Relevantly, the right to freedom of movement will be limited where a person is prevented from moving to, or from a particular place.

- 200 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because it prevents a person from attending a particular place — namely, the workplace — if they are unvaccinated.
- 201 This position is consistent with that adopted by the New South Wales Supreme Court in Kassam v Hazzard [2021] NSWSC 1320 at [70], recognising that the Court was there concerned with the common law right to movement (not the Charter right). An appeal from that decision was dismissed: see Kassam v Hazzard [2021] NSWCA 299 at [111], [175].

Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, freedom of expression, and cultural rights

- 202 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because:
- 202.1 Those who are firmly opposed to vaccinations (or to these specific vaccines) might view the requirement to show evidence of being vaccinated as limiting those persons' rights to hold an opinion about vaccination without interference, or, that this constitutes an interference with their cultural or religious rights.
- 202.2 There are some belief systems which disagree with aspects of the way that certain vaccinations are made if they are made with human tissues, and some have beliefs, associated with the body of a person being sacred, that the human body should not be in receipt of foreign chemicals or compounds.
- 202.3 The Order does not have the effect of altering or limiting a person's beliefs about vaccinations or restrict people from engaging in their cultural or religious practices in other ways, although the Order may require people to act inconsistently with those beliefs if they wish to be able to attend for work at their workplace.

Right to equality

- 203 In my opinion, the right is affected in the following ways:
- 203.1 To the extent that the Order treat persons who are not vaccinated unfavourably based on that status, that may engage the right to equality because it could amount to indirect discrimination where the effect of the Order is to discriminate against a cohort of persons with a protected attribute.
- 203.2 A requirement to be vaccinated to attend work premises and perform work on-site may disadvantage people who object to taking the relevant vaccines for a variety of reasons, including those based on religious, cultural and personal health views and other belief systems. Whilst the latter are unlikely to involve attributes protected by the Equal Opportunity Act 2010 (Vic), religion and race are protected attributes, as is disability. Reasonable measures will not constitute indirect discrimination.
- 203.3 Limitations in relation to the right to equality may arise for those in the community with a protected attributed who rely on, or deliver, services as a specified worker. Depending on their circumstances, the rights of those cohorts may be affected if the effect of the Order is to sufficiently disrupt the provision of services. In particular, the right may be affected for those with the following protected attributes in the circumstances identified below:

203.3.1 Religious belief or activity – those relying on funeral service providers, if for example, the effect of the Order is such that time critical funeral services (for those of the Jewish, Islamic or Buddhists faiths) are not able to be delivered in accordance with the required religious practice.

203.3.2 Race – those who are unable to rely on services such as interpreters, cultural or other support workers or those services required to be delivered in person to support particular ethnicities or racial groups such as Aboriginal healthcare workers or interpreters for those from culturally and linguistically diverse communities.

203.3.3 Parental status – An exclusion from a physical workplace on the basis of vaccination status may be particularly onerous for single parents, for parents of younger children, and for parents of multiple children (who may find it impossible to work effectively at home). This may cause difficulties for those persons and, further, may disproportionately affect women who typically bear more of the child-minding or caring responsibilities in the home. The exact impact of the restriction on a particular person will depend on the nature of each person's condition or circumstances. This may amount to a requirement or condition that disadvantages women. However indirect discrimination will not arise if the requirement is reasonable, as is likely to be the case here, having regard to the public health advice given by the CHO and the matters discussed in my Statement of Reasons.

204 For those reasons, I consider that the Order affects the right. However in my opinion, the right is not limited by the Order because unreasonableness is a precondition to a finding of indirect discrimination. I consider the Order to be reasonable having regard to the matters set out in the Statement of Reasons.

Privacy and reputation

205 In my opinion, the Order affects the right to privacy because it requires employers to collect the worker's vaccination status – including in relation to any booster vaccine dose, and to disclose that information to an Authorised Officer upon request.

206 Further, the right to privacy includes a right to respect for bodily integrity. However, the Order does not physically force anyone to receive a COVID-19 vaccine. I therefore do not consider that the Order affects this right.

207 However, although the Order affects the right to privacy, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order. That is because the right to privacy is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful.

208 Further:

208.1 The collection and provision of any vaccination information will be subject to the existing law, including the Health Records Act 2001. Once collected it is noted that the information will be subject to the existing protections that exist in relation to the use, storage and control of this sensitive information.

208.2 The purpose of the collection of the information is to ensure that only vaccinated people are present in relevant workplaces. Without this information the vaccination requirement cannot be enforced.

209 Having regard to those matters, and the other matters set out in the Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

Property rights

210 In my opinion, the Order affects this right because it may interfere with the rights of property owners and other persons with property rights, whose use or enjoyment of the property may be limited (real or personal).

211 In particular, the Pandemic Orders may restrict the ability of business to operate if some of their workforce are unable, or unwilling, to be vaccinated. The Order might in the short term reduce or affect the capacity of certain businesses to generate income from their real and personal property.

212 If the business and its assets are owned by an individual, and that reduction in capacity continues for a lengthy period of time, it may over time become a substantial restriction on the use of a person's property.

213 However, although the Order affects the right, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order. That is because the right is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful. Further, having regard to the public health advice given by the CHO and the matters discussed in my Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary

Right to life

214 I consider the differential treatment of specified workers based on vaccination status assists in protecting vulnerable cohorts' right to life.

215 For that reason, the right to life may be positively affected by the Order. However, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

Importance of purpose of limitations

216 The purpose of the Order, and thus of the limitations, is set out at paragraph 163 of the Statement of Reasons. That is, to impose obligations upon employers in relation to the vaccination of workers, in order to limit the spread of COVID-19 within the population of those workers.

217 Given the significance of workplaces as a site of transmission throughout the pandemic, this purpose is considered very important.

Relationship between limitations and purpose

218 There is a rational connection between the limits imposed on human rights and the purpose identified at paragraph 216 above.

Any less restrictive means reasonably available to achieve the purpose that the limitation seeks to achieve

219 This issue is considered at paragraphs 186 to 200 of the Statement of Reasons.

PANDEMIC (VISITORS TO HOSPITALS AND CARE FACILITIES) ORDER 2022 (NO. 2)

Nature and extent of limitations

220 As noted in the Statement of Reasons for the Order, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will limit the following human rights:

220.1 Right to equality;

220.2 Freedom of movement;

220.3 Protection of families and children; and

220.4 Cultural rights.

221 Further, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will affect, but not limit, the following human rights:

221.1 Right to life; and

221.2 Privacy and reputation.

222 Each of the rights limited or otherwise affected is discussed below.

Right to equality

223 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because:

223.1 A person must not enter or remain at a hospital or a care facility unless a patient or resident, a worker, a visitor who is not prohibited under the Order, a prospective resident of the care facility, or permitted under an exception in the Order such as breastfeeding, end-of-life support, or immediate family members for patients whose medical condition is life threatening.

223.2 A person permitted to enter must provide evidence of full vaccination or a negative test result for a COVID-19 rapid antigen test or PCR test. Visitors providing end-of-life support to a hospital patient or care facility resident are capped.

223.3 These restrictions can amount to unfavourable treatment on the basis of disability, or association with a person with a disability (otherwise characterisable as a person imputed to have a disability), by prohibiting visits from diagnosed persons, people with certain COVID-19 Symptoms, and close contacts (except in circumstances which remain limited despite having been eased from previous settings).

Freedom of movement

224 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because:

224.1 The Order imposes limitations on entry and caps on numbers of visitors to a hospital or a care facility. Limitations and caps are imposed where the risk of COVID-19 transmission is higher or unknown. That higher or unknown risk may be temporary (such as in the case of a close contact), or some hospital or care facility stays are temporary (such as minor inpatient procedures).

224.2 Freedom of movement of persons in Victoria in visiting hospitals and care facilities is therefore limited because it does not allow a person to travel without impediment through places used by the public. However, this limitation is only temporary given that no person is wholesale excluded.

Protection of families and children

225 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because:

225.1 Children or dependents may be visitors to hospitals without being included in a head count (where a cap applies to the number of visitors) if alternative care arrangements are unavailable and the child cannot be left unattended.

225.2 The Order also imposes restrictions on family members visiting patients or residents.

225.3 If a family member of a patient or resident is not permitted to visit, it would limit the rights of those visitors, patients, and residents to enjoy time with their family in what is likely to be a time of heightened stress.

225.4 Where children seek to have family contact, limitations on their in-person visitation rights may not be in their best interests in every circumstance.

225.5 There is therefore an incursion into the protection of families and children when they cannot meet face-to-face in a time when a relative, who is a patient or a resident, would appreciate the comfort and connection.

226 However, the Order does not inhibit non-physical means of communication. Care facilities must take all reasonable steps to ensure that alternative forms of contact are facilitated for residents.

Cultural rights

227 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because:

227.1 Given that many people practice their cultural and religious rights with family, friends, and members of the community, restrictions on who can visit them in hospital or a care facility can restrict patients' or residents' cultural or religious rights for however short or long a time the stay lasts.

227.2 For Aboriginal persons who have connection with country, restrictions on visitors may have even more of an isolating effect when patients, residents, or visitors are already away from ancestral lands.

227.3 There is therefore an incursion on the right of persons with a particular cultural, religious, racial or linguistic background to practise their culture, religion, or language to the extent that this can be done by face-to-face visits.

227.4 On the other hand, many people enjoy their culture, religion, or language through many dimensions beyond face-to-face engagement. These alternative avenues are available to family and friends seeking to exercise cultural, religious, racial or linguistic practices if they fall within the population of persons temporarily limited from visiting a person in a hospital or care facility, either because of visitor caps or COVID-19 symptoms.

Right to life

228 The right to life may be positively affected by the Order, as it will reduce the risk of transmission of COVID-19 in aged care and hospital settings where there are particularly vulnerable populations. However, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

Privacy and reputation

229 In my opinion, the Order affects the right to privacy because:

229.1 Hospitals are required to keep records of the contact details of people who visit, and their dates and times of entry and exit.

229.2 Visitors to care facilities are required to make a declaration that they are free of COVID-19 symptoms, have not been in contact with a confirmed case or are required to self-isolate or self-quarantine, and show proof of a negative COVID-19 rapid antigen test if relevant.

229.3 This information would constitute personal and health information and its provision to gain access to the care facility would therefore be an interference with privacy.

230 However, although the Order affects the right to privacy, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order. That is because the right to privacy is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful.

231 Further:

231.1 Records are subject to existing privacy legislation and principles in settings where there are already protocols and culture requiring maintenance of patient or resident confidentiality.

231.2 Details sought are limited to those necessary to establish risk of COVID-19 or to contact trace if anyone involved in the visit tests positive to COVID-19. Only the details required to establish risk and contact trace are sought.

232 Having regard to those matters, and the other matters set out in the Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

Importance of purpose of limitations

233 The purpose of the Order, and thus of the limitations, is set out at paragraph 206 of the Statement of Reasons. That is, to limit non-essential visits and access to hospitals and care facilities in order to limit the spread of COVID-19 within those particularly vulnerable populations. Given the vulnerability of people in hospitals and care facilities, and the stress on the hospital system due to the current outbreak, this purpose is considered to be very important.

Relationship between limitations and purpose

- 234 There is a rational connection between the limits imposed on human rights and the purpose identified at paragraph 233 above.
- 235 Persons in care facilities are vulnerable to serious illness or serious physical, mental, or social consequences of illness. Hospitals and care facilities are both high-density and high-contact forms of accommodation involving both residents and staff, and COVID-19 can spread quickly in such settings. COVID-19 has also spread among healthcare workers who are highly trained, not easily replaced, and valued members of their families and community in their own right.

Any less restrictive means reasonably available to achieve the purpose that the limitation seeks to achieve

- 236 This issue is considered at paragraphs 228 to 234 of the Statement of Reasons.

PANDEMIC (VICTORIAN BORDER CROSSING) ORDER 2022 (NO. 3)

Nature and extent of limitations

237 As noted in the Statement of Reasons for the Order, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will limit the following human rights:

237.1 Right to equality;

237.2 Freedom of movement;

237.3 Protection of families and children; and

237.4 Cultural rights.

238 Further, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will affect, but not limit, the following human rights:

238.1 Protection from medical treatment without full, free and informed consent;

238.2 Privacy and reputation;

238.3 Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief;

238.4 Freedom of expression;

238.5 Right to liberty and security of persons;

238.6 Humane treatment when deprived of liberty; and

238.7 Right to life.

239 Each of the rights limited or otherwise affected is discussed below.

Right to equality

240 In my opinion, this right is limited in the following ways:

240.1 This Order imposes self-quarantine (for some), testing, and permit requirements (including the disclosure of some personal and medical information) on international aircrew services workers and international passenger arrivals which are more onerous than the settings for people in Victoria who have not visited another country in the past 14 days.

240.2 These restrictions can amount to unfavourable treatment on the basis of disability, or association with a person with a disability (otherwise characterisable as a person imputed to have a disability), by requiring people imputed to have higher risk of infection with COVID-19 to self-quarantine. It may also amount to unfavourable treatment on the basis of employment activity for international aircrew services workers who must be tested frequently or must self-quarantine.

240.3 The definition of international passenger arrival now excludes international maritime arrivals, who were never intended to be covered under the Orders. The amendment clarifies this position so that international maritime arrivals receive detention notices from CQV and be covered by those notices.

Freedom of movement

241 Relevantly, the right to freedom of movement will be limited where a person is prevented from moving to, or from a particular place.

242 In my opinion, this right is limited because:

242.1 An international aircrew services worker who is not fully vaccinated or medically exempt must self-quarantine for 7 days after arrival unless undertaking essential activities.

242.2 Adolescents who are not fully vaccinated and are not medically exempt must self-quarantine until the eighth day after arrival in Australia, unless undertaking essential activities. If the person arrived in Victoria after the end of the self-quarantine period, the person is not required to self-quarantine. While in self-quarantine, the person must not share spaces or facilities at the self-quarantine premises. There is a broad exemption power to any part of the Order held by senior officials in the Department. If an exemption is granted, the recipient must carry evidence of the exemption, any applicable documentary evidence, and a form of identification.

Protection of families and children, and cultural rights

243 In my opinion, these rights are limited in the following ways:

243.1 International aircrew services workers are required to self-quarantine depending on their vaccination status and time of arrival.

243.2 An international passenger arrival in self-quarantine must not share spaces or facilities at the premises while self-quarantining.

243.3 There is a broad exemption power to any part of the Order held by senior officials in the Department. If an exemption is granted, the recipient must carry evidence of the exemption, any applicable documentary evidence, and a form of identification.

243.4 Given that children under 12 years remain ineligible for vaccination, many people required to self-quarantine choose to do so away from their family and children. The Order requires that a person self-quarantining cannot even use shared facilities in the premise. This can cause disruptions in relationships, economic difficulties, isolation from culture and traditions, and uncertainty and anxiety. Quarantine measures can be characterised as an incursion into the right of protection of families and children where international passenger arrivals or international aircrew services workers persons may have family events (such as school concerns or hospital admissions) and are prevented from being together, or children are not supported by their families on important occasions.

243.5 Self-isolation or self-quarantine measures also constitute an incursion into the rights of people of different cultural, religious, racial or linguistic backgrounds to practice their culture, religion, or language to the extent that the short period prevents them from doing so. While there are many ways of enjoying one's culture, religion, or language at home or online, there may be activities which can only be done face-to-face or in a certain location outside the home.

Protection from medical treatment without full, free and informed consent

244 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because:

- 244.1 The Order imposes obligations on persons to be tested for COVID-19. A worker who remains in Victoria for 48 hours or longer must have completed a pre-departure COVID-19 test unless the worker is operating turnaround flights and all the workers on that flight remain airside. A worker who is fully vaccinated or medically exempt and who remains in Victoria for 48 hours must complete a COVID-19 test within 24 hours of arrival in Victoria. A worker who is not fully vaccinated and not medically exempt must complete a COVID-19 test within 24 hours of arrival in Victoria.
- 244.2 An international passenger arrival must take a COVID-19 test within 24 hours of arrival into Australia (if within 24 hours of arrival the person is in Victoria).
- 244.3 COVID-19 tests will either be PCR or rapid antigen tests as set out in the Departmental document titled "International arrivals and aircrew testing requirements".
- 244.4 I have assumed that taking a test for COVID-19 constitutes a medical treatment, although I note this is unclear: see De Bruyn v Victorian Institute of Forensic Mental Health (2016) 48 VR 647; [2016] VSC 111 at [159][160]. In New Zealand, the taking of a swab to obtain a bodily sample for forensic purposes has been held not to be medical treatment,⁴⁰ however, the taking of a blood sample for the purposes of determining paternity was considered medical treatment.⁴¹

Privacy and reputation

245 In my opinion, the Order affects the right to privacy because:

- 245.1 An international passenger arrival must obtain a travel permit using the Service Victoria platform if 12 years and 2 months of age or above, or less than 12 years and 2 months and travelling unaccompanied. Until 14 days after their arrival in Australia, the person must carry and present on request the permit, identification, evidence of vaccination or medical exemption, and negative COVID-19 test results if relevant. The permit lapses on the 15th day after arrival.
- 245.2 There is a broad exemption power to any part of the Order held by senior officials in the Department. If an exemption is granted, the recipient must carry evidence of the exemption, any applicable documentary evidence, and a form of identification.
- 245.3 The information required to be disclosed and carried by these Orders is intended to be limited to that necessary to identifying which people are at risk of becoming infected with ⁴⁰ Taylor v Attorney-General HC Auckland CIV-2010-485-226, 9 July 2011, [32] and [36] and the cases considered therein.

⁴¹ Cairns v James [1992] NZFLR 353 (HC), 356.

COVID-19, and which of those people arriving from outside Australia are known to the Department (so that their risk of transmission of COVID-19 is also known).

- 246 The right to privacy will not be limited by being restricted, as long as those restrictions are not unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful.
- 247 The restrictions on privacy are not arbitrary because the information sought is bare identification and contact details and COVID-19 test results if necessary. They are little more than details that people already in Victoria carry as they go about their ordinary lives to participate in the vaccinated economy, to drive or enter licensed venues, and so on. Having regard to those matters, and the other matters set out in the Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.
- 248 For those reasons, although the Order affects the right to privacy, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, and freedom of expression

249 In my opinion, these rights are affected but not limited because:

249.1 Those who are firmly opposed to restrictions on their daily activities may argue that the requirements the Order creates limits their rights to hold an opinion about the pandemic or its management without interference.

249.2 However, the Order does not preclude a person from holding an opinion or belief either for, or against, the Order, management of the pandemic response, or the pandemic. The Order penalises non-compliance but do not have the effect of altering or limiting a person's beliefs and do not fully inhibit those beliefs from being expressed or shared while complying with the Order, such as through online engagement.

249.3 For those reasons, although the Order affects the rights to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, and freedom of expression, in my opinion, they are not limited by the Order.

Right to liberty and security of persons, and humane treatment when deprived of liberty

250 In my opinion, these rights are affected but not limited because:

250.1 An international aircrew services worker who is not fully vaccinated or medically exempt must travel directly into self-quarantine and may only leave the vehicle for certain specified purposes. The worker must self-quarantine for 14 days after arrival unless undertaking essential activities.

250.2 An adolescent international passenger arrival who is not fully vaccinated and not medically exempt must travel directly into self-quarantine and may only leave the vehicle for certain specified purposes and must remain in self-quarantine until the 8th day after arrival unless undertaking essential activities. While in self-quarantine, the person must not share spaces or facilities at the self-quarantine premises.

250.3 The requirements of self-isolation and self-quarantine place significant restrictions on the ability of people to move freely. The right to liberty has been described as 'the most elementary and important of all common law rights' in R v Foster (1993) 113 ALR 1, 8.

250.4 However, the right to liberty and security is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful.

250.5 The Order deprives people of liberty only for the time the medical evidence suggests is appropriate to make sure that a person is not at risk of transmitting COVID-19, depending on whether a person is fully vaccinated or not and medically exempt or not, keeping in mind that variants of COVID-19 outside of Australia are different and not as well known by local science. The right to liberty is not limited because the period of self-quarantine is made under law is necessary to address the epidemiological risk, making the period of detention not arbitrary.

251 For those reasons, although the Order affects the right, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

252 Because the right to liberty and security is not limited, no issue arises about humane treatment when deprived of liberty (because the threshold is not met). Therefore, in my opinion, it is not limited.

Right to life

253 The right to life may be positively affected by the Order. In my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

Importance of purpose of limitations

254 The purpose of the Order, and thus of the limitations, is set out at paragraph 279 of the Statement of Reasons. That is, to provide a scheme for persons arriving in Australia as an international passenger arrival or international aircrew services worker, to limit the spread of COVID-19.

255 That is an important purpose.

Relationship between limitations and purpose

256 There is a rational connection between the limits imposed on human rights and the purpose identified at paragraph 254 above.

Any less restrictive means reasonably available to achieve the purpose that the limitation seeks to achieve

257 This issue is considered at paragraphs 307 to 310 of the Statement of Reasons.

PANDEMIC (MOVEMENT AND GATHERING) ORDER 2022 (NO. 3)

Nature and extent of limitations

258 As noted in the Statement of Reasons for the Order, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the Order will limit the following human rights:

258.1 Freedom from being subject to medical or scientific experimentation or treatment without his or her full, free and informed consent;

258.2 Freedom of movement;

258.3 Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief;

258.4 Freedom of expression; and

258.5 Cultural rights.

259 Further, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will affect, but not limit, the following human rights:

259.1 Right to equality;

259.2 Privacy and reputation; and

259.3 Property rights.

260 Each of the rights limited or otherwise affected is discussed below.

Protection from medical treatment without full, free and informed consent

261 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because its practical effect is to require a persons to be vaccinated to perform work or study outside of their ordinary place of residence.

262 I note that this position is consistent with adopted by the New Zealand Government in recent litigation in which mandatory vaccination orders were challenged and which an equivalent right was considered. The New Zealand High Court has accepted the correctness of that position on three occasions: GF v Minister of COVID-19 Response [2021] NZHC 2526 at [70]; Four Aviation Security Service Employees v Minister of Covid-19 Response [2021] NZHC 3012 at [28]; and Four Midwives v Minister for COVID-19 Response at [38].

Freedom of movement

263 Relevantly, the right to freedom of movement will be limited where a person is prevented from moving to, or from a particular place.

264 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because it prevents a person from attending a particular place to work if they are unvaccinated.

265 This position is consistent with that adopted by the New South Wales Supreme Court in Kassam v Hazzard [2021] NSWSC 1320 at [70], recognising that the Court was there concerned with the common law right to movement (not the Charter right). An appeal from that decision was dismissed: see Kassam v Hazzard [2021] NSWCA 299 at [111], [175]

Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, freedom of expression and cultural rights

266 In my opinion, the Order limits these rights because:

266.1 Those who are firmly opposed to vaccinations (or to these specific vaccines) might view the requirement to show evidence of being vaccinated as limiting those persons' rights to hold an opinion about vaccination without interference, or, that this constitutes an interference with their cultural or religious rights.

266.2 There are some belief systems which disagree with aspects of the way that certain vaccinations are made if they are made with human tissues, and some have beliefs, associated with the body of a person being sacred, that the human body should not be in receipt of foreign chemicals or compounds.

266.3 The Pandemic Orders do not have the effect of altering or limiting a person's beliefs about vaccinations or restrict people from engaging in their cultural or religious practices in other ways, although they may require people who work at ceremonial spaces to act inconsistently with those beliefs if they wish to be able to attend for work at the ceremonial space.

Right to equality

267 In my opinion, the Order affected this right because:

267.1 To the extent that the Order treats persons who are not vaccinated unfavourably on the basis of that status that may engage the right to equality because it could amount to indirect discrimination where the effect of the Order is to discriminate against a cohort of persons with a protected attribute.

267.2 A requirement to be vaccinated in order to attend work at a ceremonial space may disadvantage people who object to taking the relevant vaccines for a variety of reasons, including those based on religious, cultural and personal health views and other belief systems. Whilst the latter are unlikely to involve attributes protected by the EO Act, religion and race are protected attributes as is disability.

267.3 An exception to the requirement is provided for people who have certification from a medical practitioner that they are unable to receive a dose or a further dose of a relevant vaccine due to a medical contraindication. The requirement will therefore not be imposed on people with disabilities that preclude them being vaccinated.

267.4 An exclusion from a physical workplace on the basis of vaccination status may be particularly onerous for single parents, for parents of younger children, and for parents of multiple children (who may find it impossible to work effectively at home). This may cause difficulties for those persons and, further, may disproportionately affect women who typically bear more of the child-minding or caring responsibilities in the home. The exact impact of the restriction on a particular person will depend on the nature of each person's condition or circumstances. This may amount to a requirement or condition that disadvantages women. However indirect discrimination will not arise if the requirement is reasonable, as is likely to be the case here, having regard to the serious, avoidable and irreversible adverse health consequences that uncontrolled transmission of COVID-19 may have.

267.5 Furthermore, the Order will impose a requirement for those aged 8 years and over to wear face coverings (unless an exemption applies) in an indoor space or at an event with 30,000 or more attendees.

267.6 The requirement to wear a face covering could conceivably amount to indirect discrimination on the basis of a person's physical features or religious belief or activity (for example, where a person wears a beard for religious purposes) or on the basis of disability (for example, for people with hearing impairments who rely on lip-reading or for those with breathing or lung difficulties). The definition of 'face covering' will however still allow people who wear face coverings for religious purposes to continue to wear their religious or cultural clothing, in addition to a face covering.

268 For those reasons, I consider that the Order affects the right. However in my opinion, the right is not limited by the Order because unreasonableness is a precondition to a finding of indirect discrimination. I consider the Order to be reasonable having regard to the matters set out in the Statement of Reasons.

Privacy and reputation

269 In my opinion, the Order affects the right to privacy because:

269.1 It requires organisers of ceremonies to collect vaccination information of persons who work at the ceremonial space.

269.2 It will impose a requirement to wear face coverings in an indoor space or at an event with 30,000 or more attendees unless the person is seated outdoors at the event or unless an exemption applies. The Order will interfere somewhat with people's rights to establish and develop meaningful social relations (within the right to privacy) by reason of the requirement to wear face coverings.

269.3 The face coverings requirement may also interfere with privacy, including bodily privacy, to the extent that it interferes with people's personal choices regarding whether or not to wear a face covering in the circumstances in which it is imposed.

270 Further, the right to privacy includes a right to respect for bodily integrity. However, the Order does not physically force anyone to receive a COVID-19 vaccine. I therefore do not consider that the Order affects this right.

271 However, although the Order affects the right to privacy, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order. That is because the right to privacy is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful.

272 Further:

272.1 The collection and provision of any vaccination information will be subject to the existing law, including the Health Records Act 2001. Once collected it is noted that the information will be subject to the existing protections that exist in relation to the use, storage and control of this sensitive information.

272.2 The purpose of the collection of the information is to ensure that only vaccinated or excepted people are present in ceremonial space. Without this information the vaccination requirement cannot be enforced.

273 Having regard to those matters, and the other matters set out in the Statement of reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

Property rights

274 In my opinion, the Order affects this right because it may interfere with the rights of property owners and other persons with property rights, whose use or enjoyment of the property (real or personal).

275 In particular, the Pandemic Orders may restrict the ability of organisers of ceremonies to operate if some of their workforce are unable, or unwilling, to be vaccinated. The Order might in the short term reduce or affect the capacity of certain organisers of ceremonies to generate income from their real and personal property.

276 If the business and its assets are owned by an individual, and that reduction in capacity continues for a lengthy period of time, it may over time become a substantial restriction on the use of a person's property.

277 However, although the Order affects the right, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order. That is because the right is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is lawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful. Further, having regard to the public health advice given by the CHO and the matters discussed in my Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

Importance of purpose of limitations

278 The purpose of the Order, and thus of the limitations, is set out at paragraph 239 of the Statement of Reasons. That is, to reduce the spread of COVID-19 in indoor settings; and impose requirements to carry and wear face coverings in certain settings, impose obligations on organisers of ceremonies in relation to vaccination requirements of workers and to impose obligations on workers to be vaccinated to perform work outside of their home in order to address the serious public health risk posed to the State of Victoria by the spread of COVID-19.

279 That is an important purpose.

Relationship between limitations and purpose

280 There is a rational connection between the limits imposed on human rights and the purpose identified at paragraph 278 above.

Any less restrictive means reasonably available to achieve the purpose that the limitation seeks to achieve

281 This issue is considered at paragraphs 259 to 273 of the Statement of Reasons.

PANDEMIC (DETENTION) ORDER 2022 (NO. 3)

Nature and extent of limitations

282 As noted in the Statement of Reasons for the Order, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will limit the following human rights:

282.1 Right to equality;

282.2 Protection from medical treatment without full, free and informed consent;

282.3 Freedom of movement;

282.4 Protection of families and children; and

282.5 Cultural rights.

283 Further, in my opinion, the obligations imposed by the order will affect, but not limit, the following human rights:

283.1 Privacy and reputation;

283.2 Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief;

283.3 Freedom of expression;

283.4 Right to liberty and security of persons;

283.5 Humane treatment when deprived of liberty; and

283.6 Right to life.

284 Each of the rights limited or otherwise affected is discussed below.

Right to equality

285 In my opinion, the Order limits the right because:

285.1 A person who arrives in Victoria from outside of Australia who is not fully vaccinated or a medically exempted person (subject to other conditions) may be detained at a place specified by the authorised officer for a period specified in Schedule 2 of the Order or earlier until tested.

285.2 A detained person may only leave the place of detention for specified purposes and may not permit any other person from entering the place of detention unless that other person is lawfully authorised to do so, is detained at the same place, or ordinarily resides with the person under detention.

285.3 A person may stay with a detained person who is a minor or who has a disability or medical condition which requires support or treatment, if the person submits to the same conditions of detention.

285.4 These restrictions can amount to unfavourable treatment on the basis of disability, or association with a person with a disability (otherwise characterisable as a person imputed to have a disability), by requiring people with the imputed disability of possible infection with COVID-19 to be detained, and requiring people seeking to care for certain persons with that imputed disability to stay at the place of detention under the same conditions.

Freedom of movement

286 Relevantly, the right to freedom of movement will be limited where a person is prevented from moving to, or from a particular place.

287 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because it requires the detention – a severe restriction on freedom of movement - of 'persons of risk' for the period specified in the Order.

Protection of families and children, and cultural rights

288 In my opinion, the Order limits these rights because:

288.1 If the detained person has family in Victoria, this person is unable to be reunited with family for the period of detention.

288.2 A detained person may permit a person to enter the place of detention if the person ordinarily resides with the person under detention. A person may stay with a detained person who is a minor or who has a disability or medical condition which requires support or treatment, if the person submits to the same conditions of detention. Other members of the detained person's family cannot enter or join them in detention.

288.3 For detained persons separated from their family, the detention can cause disruptions in relationships, economic difficulties, isolation from culture and traditions, and uncertainty and anxiety. Detention can therefore be characterised as an incursion into the right to protection of families and children.

288.4 Detention can also constitute an incursion into the rights of people of different cultural, religious, racial or linguistic backgrounds to practice their culture, religion, or language to the extent that the short period prevents them from doing so. While there are many ways of enjoying one's culture, religion, or language in the place of detention or online, there may be activities which can only be done face-to-face or in a certain location.

Protection from medical treatment without full, free and informed consent

289 In my opinion, the Order limits this right because:

289.1 Although the Order does not impose an obligation to be tested, persons may be requested to be tested while they are detained.

289.2 Furthermore, a Note in the Order states that, if a person refuses to take a test for COVID-19 when requested to do so and it is considered necessary to require a further period of detention, this will be done by the exercise of a pandemic management general power under s 165BA(1)(b) of the PHW Act.

289.3 As a result, a person may feel compelled to undertake a COVID-19 test. I have assumed that taking a test for COVID-19 constitutes a medical treatment, although I note this is unclear: see De Bruyn v Victorian Institute of Forensic Mental Health (2016) 48 VR 647; [2016] VSC 111 at [159]-[160]. In New Zealand, the taking of a swab to obtain a bodily sample for forensic purposes has been held not to be medical treatment,⁴² however, the taking of a blood sample for the purposes of determining paternity was considered medical treatment.⁴³

Privacy and reputation

290 In my opinion, the Order affects the right to privacy because:

290.1 A detained person may only leave the place of detention for specified purposes and may not permit any other person from entering the place of detention unless that other person is lawfully authorised to do so, is detained at the same place, or ordinarily resides with the person under detention. To demonstrate that leaving or a visit is for a purpose permitted under the Order, a detained person necessarily needs to disclose information, some of which will be personal and some of which will be medical. Being monitored will also erode a person's privacy while they are being detained. This may include being asked questions about where the person is and what they are doing, or a view into the person's place of detention which may show personal items and activities.

290.2 A person may stay with a detained person who is a minor or who has a disability or medical condition which requires support or treatment, if the person submits to the same conditions of detention. Again, to arrange these conditions would require a disclosure of personal and/or medical information.

290.3 The degree of information required to be disclosed by this Order is intended to be limited to that necessary to identifying the level of risk in relation to a proposed activity measured as against the purposes permitted by the Order.

291 However, although the Order affects the right to privacy, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order. That is because the right to privacy is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful.

292 Further:

292.1 The information sought is not so much that the incursion into privacy is disproportionate to the purpose and is therefore arbitrary; and

292.2 A person is only detained for a period considered epidemiologically necessary to address the risk that a person coming into Victoria from outside of Australia is capable of transmitting COVID-19 to those in the community.

293 Having regard to that matter, and the other matters set out in the Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

Freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, and freedom of expression

294 In my opinion, the Order affects these rights because:

⁴² Taylor v Attorney-General HC Auckland CIV-2010-485-226, 9 July 2011, [32] and [36] and the cases considered therein.

⁴³ Cairns v James [1992] NZFLR 353 (HC), 356.

294.1 Those who are firmly opposed to restrictions on their daily activities may argue that the requirements the Order creates limits their rights to hold an opinion about the pandemic or its management without interference. The Order does not preclude a person from holding an opinion or belief either for, or against, the Order, management of the pandemic response, or the pandemic. The Order does not preclude a person from expressing those beliefs and, indeed, expressions of opinion can occur while detained and fully complying with the Order. The Order penalises non-compliance but does not have the effect of altering or limiting a person's beliefs and does not fully inhibit those beliefs from being expressed or shared while complying with the Order, such as through online engagement or complaint.

294.2 Online engagement is also available for those wishing to practice their religious or cultural beliefs, and many such activities can be performed alone. The mere fact of a limited period of detention does not prevent a person from believing in their religion or expressing their cultural values, even if detained in one location and unable to meet face-to-face with other adherents except in very limited circumstances.

Right to liberty and security of persons, and humane treatment when deprived of liberty

295 In my opinion, the Order affects these rights because detention places significant restrictions on a person's ability to move freely.

296 However, the right to liberty and security is not limited by a restriction unless the restriction is unlawful or arbitrary. Here, the restriction is authorised by the PHW Act and is therefore lawful.

297 Further, people are detained only for the time the medical evidence suggests is reasonably necessary to make sure that a person is not at risk of transmitting COVID-19.

298 Having regard to those matters, and the other matters set out in the Statement of Reasons, the restrictions imposed by the Order are not arbitrary.

299 Accordingly, in my opinion, although the Order affects the right to liberty and security, in my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

300 Because the right to liberty and security is not limited, no issue arises about humane treatment when deprived of liberty (because the threshold is not met). Therefore, in my opinion, it is not limited.

Right to life

301 The right to life may be positively affected by the Order. In my opinion, it is not limited by the Order.

Importance of purpose of limitations

302 The purpose of the Order, and thus of the limitations, is set out at paragraph 314 of the Statement of Reasons. That is, to limit the transmission of COVID-19 by requiring persons of risk to be detained in accordance with the Order for the periods specified in the Order.

303 That is an important purpose.

Relationship between limitations and purpose

304 There is a rational connection between the limits imposed on human rights and the purpose identified at paragraph 302 above.

Any less restrictive means reasonably available to achieve the purpose that the limitation seeks to achieve

305 This issue is considered at paragraphs 342 to 346 of the Statement of Reasons.